Committee Calls Upon Roosevelt To Run Again

Hannegan Succeeds Walker in Post of Chairman; Chicago Convention Choice

By Robert C. Albright

The Democratic National Committee, in an unscheduled fourth-term demonstration, yesterday called on President Roosevelt "to continue as our great world humanitarian leader."

The resolution, unanimously adopted, did not mention the fourth term, but party leaders plainly meant it as the opening shot in a "Win with Roosevelt" campaign.

Hannegan Succeeds Walker

The committee's "earnest solicitation" of the President followed resignation of Frank C. Walker as National Democratic chairman and unanimous election of rangy, 40-year-old Robert E. Hannegan of St. Louis, as his successor.

The committee then quickly settled on Chicago as the 1944 Democratic convention city and authorized Hannegan to set the date. The new chairman said this was still undetermined, but indications were it would follow the June 26 Republican National Convention in Chicago by about a month.

Hannegan, only recently brought here from St. Louis as U. S. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, immediately resigned from that post and announced he would not "seek to return" to it.

Later, President Roosevelt, in a letter addressed, "Dear Bob," accepted Hannegan's resignation and said: "You have my continuing good wishes and confidence."

Graves to Act in Place

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau said he had appointed Harold N. Graves, assistant to Hannegan to be acting internal Revenue Commissioner.

Walker's resignation as national chairman to devote "full attention and energy" to his Postmaster Generalship and separation of Hannegan from his Treasury post, for the first time in decades divorced the top party political job from Government office.

The committee's fourth-term call came near the end of a four-hour business session. It was read to the meeting by Senator Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island,

Burglars Escape In Stolen Car; 'Borrowed' 2 Cabs

Police of the District, Maryland and Virginia last night were seeking two men after they had been discovered burglarizing a home and had commandeered two taxicabs and stolen another to effect their escape.

Mrs. Mabel Pittle of 4720 Massachusetts ave. nw., wife of Joseph Pittle, who conducts a haberdashery at 930 F st. nw., discovered the men in her dining room when she returned home about 10 p. m. She said the men threatened her with a gun. Then they fled, and took command of a cab they stopped.

Police then reported the men left this cab and took another at the Shoreham Hotel.

The second cab driver was forced to take them to the vicinity of the Zoo, where, police said, they stopped another driver, commandeered his cab at gun point, forced him out, and fled with his car.

District Man Jailed 6 Months For Beating 8-Year-Old Son

Joe Mercer, 32, of 620 E st. sw., went to jail yesterday for six months for the beating of his 8-year-old son, Joe, jr., who left the courtroom hand-in-hand with his grandmother after he told the judge, "I don't want to go back to live with my father."

The boy's face and back were still bruised and welted by the strapping inflicted on him for what the father said was lying and staying out late.

In sentencing Mercer, Judge Thomas D. Quinn of Municipal Court said:

"You can't make a boy that age behave by beating him. I hope the District authorities will take some notice of this case and see that the boy is put in a good home. You, Mr. Mercer, have the dual capacity of acting as father and mother, but I don't think you have done either one well."

Mercer, whose wife died two weeks ago, stood with his head hanging.

The child will reside with his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Sam Moorman, 487 E st. sw. She is already caring for his two sisters and a brother.

Joe, jr., brown-haired and smiling, was first asked by the judge, "Do you know what will happen to

At Jackson Dinner

New Deal Tag Resurrected By Wallace

Vice President Henry Wallace last night tossed a monkey wrench into the 1944 Democratic campaign strategy when he called to life the New Deal, pinned the label firmly on Mr. Roosevelt and demanded a New Deal platform in 1944.

Wallace upset organization strategy before 1200 puzzled party workers who had paid $100 a plate to eat an ordinary dinner in honor of Andrew Jackson and the Democratic Party.

In spite of Mr. Roosevelt's recent announcement that Dr. New Deal had been supplanted by "Dr. Win the War," Mr. Wallace told the bedecked but unenthusiastic party diners:

"The New Deal is not dead. If it were dead the Democratic Party would be dead, and well dead . . . The New Deal has yet to attain its full strength."

Wallace had been billed for only a 5-minute speech, while Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas was booked for the main speech of the evening. When his turn came, Rayburn spoke down the line of "Dr. Win the War" strategy, with nary a mention of the New Deal.

Rayburn made a solid, middle-of-the-road speech, with ringing tribute to "two heroic figures"—President Roosevelt and Cordell Hull. He delivered a closing blast at "complainers" on the home front and a plea for sacrifice and unity.

Word had gone out that there might be some sort of speaking contest between Rayburn and Wallace, the former strongly backed by some conservative party interests

WFA Clamps Wage Curbs On Farm Pay

Maximum Ceiling $2400 Yearly; Machinery Setup

By Christine Sadler

To plug one of the most troublesome gaps in the country's stabilization plan, War Food Administrator Marvin Jones has ordered a wage-control program for all agricultural workers, with the maximum ceiling set at $2400 a year.

WFA labor offices have been instructed to set up State farm wage boards to hold hearings and establish wages in much the same manner used by the War Labor Board in determining ceilings for industrial workers.

Officials in the WFA yesterday said that while not many farm workers make $2400 on annual salary, special seasonal workers often are employed at a rate which would run their yearly pay much above that. The pay rate of these workers will be controlled under the new regulation so they cannot make more during a 60-day period than they would for that time if employed on a $2400 annual salary.

$63 Monthly Average

The national average of agriculture rates at present is $63 a month, with board. The average in 1942 was $50.91 and during 1935-39 was $26 a month. Considerably higher than the average is paid in many areas and for many types of farm work, notably on the West Coast and for dairy workers.

Always a determining factor in the costs of several foods, farm wage rates advanced 64 points in 1943 until they were 264 per cent of the 1910-14 average.

Farm labor, like domestic help, has traditionally been a "sacred

Marching Along Together

Individual Bond Purchases Reach 18% of Quota in D. C.

Eighteen per cent of Washington's individual purchase bond goal—considered the backbone of the Fourth War Loan drive locally—has been subscribed in four days, it was revealed yesterday.

Totals released by the Treasury Department yesterday showed that $9,300,000 worth of bonds have been sold thus far to individuals—a figure comprising slightly less than 10 per cent of the city's 95 million dollar quota.

Corporation subscriptions with a goal of 42 million dollars are not to be tabulated until February 1.

John A. Reilly, chairman of the District War Finance Committee, said yesterday that the individual sales will mean either success or failure of the drive.

"Workers are placing emphasis on the fact that the campaign cannot be considered a success unless the individual goal of 53 million dollars is reached," Reilly asserted. "Thus far reports from every part of the city indicate that Washington's citizens are responding to the bond appeal and will meet their obligations to our fighting forces."

Sales of Series E bonds— the so-called "peoples' bonds" have mounted to $5,300,000, 17.66 per cent.

Bond activities yesterday showed a determined interest on the part of the residents to fulfill their obligations—a tenacity displayed in carrying over the top the three

Attrition

London, Jan. 22 (AP).—The central German industrial city of Magdeburg, twice destroyed by fire centuries ago, once more was ablaze tonight after a terrific hammering by the RAF which brought to a climax a mighty 26-hour aerial battle involving perhaps 3000 Allied planes.

Large sections of the city, a rail junction harboring a wide variety of war industries, were left in flames by a deluge of more than 2000 long tons of explosives and incendiaries dropped with saturating effect in 34 minutes by planes which flew more than 500 miles to reach their targets.

The assault brought to at least 6300 tons the total weight of bombs hurled on Europe by Allied air armadas in two nights and a day. An RAF assault on Berlin Thursday night and an American heavy bomber pounding of the "Rocket Gun Coast" of France Friday were the other principal raids.

While the RAF was pulverizing Magdeburg, capital of the Prussian Province of Saxony lying on the left bank of the Elbe 83 miles southwest of Berlin, smaller fleets of four-engined Lancasters and Plywood Mosquitos again visited bomb-scarred Berlin, and the Germans unwrapped a new type of night raider to make their heaviest

Bombers Collide Near Langley Field Killing Seven

Langley Field, Va., Jan. 22 (AP).—Seven army fliers were killed and eight others escaped with minor injuries early this morning when two four-motored bombers collided in midair near Langley Field.

Langley Field officers said that the two ships were approaching the field for a landing about 1 a. m. after a training mission when the accident occurred. One of the big planes crashed and burned near Fox Hill, resulting in the death of all members of its crew. The other aircraft made a crash landing in a swamp near Messick and, although the plane was virtually demolished, none of its crew suffered serious injury.

The seven dead: Second Lieut. Howard I. Cosgrove, 21, the pilot, Weston, Mass.; Flight Officer Maurice R. Merren, 22, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Sergt. Robert B. Anderson, 27, East Chicago, Ind.; Sergt Frederick E. Schreiber, 21, Inglewood, Calif.; Staff Sergt. Oliver M. Vance, 29, Fort Worth, Tex.; Sergt Dwight O. Rowlett, 26, Kansas City, Mo.; Staff Sergt. Liaison Officer

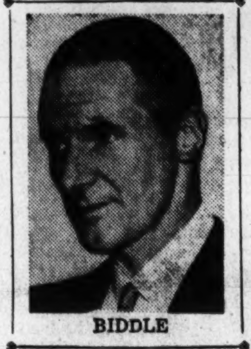
Anthony Biddle Enters Army To Look After Exiled Regimes

By the Associated Press

Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, jr., American Ambassador-Minister to Allied governments in London, has resigned to accept an Army commission as a lieutenant colonel and serve on Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's staff as liaison officer with the exiled governments.

President Roosevelt accepted the resignation yesterday. Biddle was the American envoy to the governments of Poland, Norway, Belgium, Czechoslovakia and Luxembourg.



BIDDLE

In accepting the resignation, Mr. Roosevelt wrote Biddle that the period is approaching "when these governments must look forward to the reestablishment of their countries." He said he considered it wise, therefore, "for us to take up the military side of the restoration problems" and thus it is "right and proper" that Biddle serve as liaison officer between them and our own armies.

"From members of the different governments to which you were accredited as well as from their chiefs of staff," Mr. Roosevelt wrote, "I have had nothing but the highest praise for your work. Your position has been one which is unique in all history to serve as Ambassa-

Russians Push Toward Vital Railway Hub

Beaten Nazis Flee From Leningrad; 70 Towns Captured

London (Sunday), Jan. 23 (AP).—The Russians, pursuing the beaten German besiegers of Leningrad, have closed to within six miles of the great rail hub of Krasnogvardeisk controlling the trunk railways to Estonia and Poland, while other forces to the east have cleared a second Leningrad-Moscow rail route and are advancing to free the third.

The Moscow bulletin said 70 towns and hamlets were captured and more than 2500 Germans were killed in the Leningrad area. In one sector, a group of Germans fled in panic when a Soviet advance surprised them and on all sectors many prisoners and much booty were captured.

Many Germans laid down their arms and surrendered in the forests west of Novgorod, less than 100 miles south of Leningrad as the Russians cleaned out the last pockets of surrounded Nazis. The railway station of Tatino, 20 miles north of Novgorod, and two other unnamed stations were captured after a fierce battle, the communique said.

Pripet Marshes Gains

Gains were also made in southern White Russia where seven communities were taken, as the forces of Gen. Konstantine Rokossovsky reached out from captured Kalinkovichi through the Pripet Marshes.

The Leningrad fighting saw the day's greatest advances as Gen. Leonid A. Govorov's forces captured Komolovo and Zaitsevo, both 6 miles northwest of Krasnogvardeisk.

In the north, after capturing Mga Friday, the Russians opened the railway from Leningrad to Moscow via Mga, Volkhov, Vologda and Yaroslavl. By yesterday's gains the Russians cleared the Leningrad to Moscow line via Mga, Kurishi and Ovinishche, which is shorter.

Moreover, the Russians were now driving for the double-tracked main line through Kolpino-Tosno and Kalinin, the most efficient route between the Soviet Union's two largest cities. Swinging in from the east, where Mga was captured, Red army troops were only

Flight Over Italy

Allies Moving Unhampered, Witness Says

By Kenneth Dixon

An Advanced Air Base in Italy, Jan. 22 (AP).—From the air, the Allied troops who started the surprise landing far behind the German line on the western coast of central Italy appeared to be still moving steadily forward late this afternoon and as yet meeting no major enemy opposition.

I flew over the beachhead shortly before 4 o'clock, riding the plexiglass nose of a Boston light bomber on a mission to crumble the buildings of the town of Frosinone into the streets to block Highway 6—the road to Rome—so that German supplies and reinforcements from the Cassino front couldn't reach the area.

As a hitchhiker on an A-20, I noted these things:

Landing craft were streaming in to the shore in the American sector of the beachhead.

No shells were falling in their area as they approached.

There were no artillery flashes visible from the inland areas still occupied by the enemy.

The only major movement I could see—with field glasses from 10,000 feet—was friendly forces

Allies Astonished That Blow Caught Nazis Unaware

Allied Headquarters, Algiers, Jan. 22 (AP).—Military minds at Allied headquarters were pleasingly astonished that the big amphibious drive today by American-British forces which vaulted up the Italian west coast south of Rome "achieved a complete tactical surprise" over the enemy.

Preparations for the sea sweep have been under way for weeks. It was impossible to keep such preparations hidden. Italian harbors have been crowded with landing craft where hundreds of thousands of Italians could see them.

That a big sea operation was in prospect was common talk for at least two weeks among the Italians. Even the French hundreds of miles away in Africa heard about it several days ago. Seemingly everyone knew about it except the Germans.

Opposition Is Slight

U. S. Planes Raid Paramushiru In Kuriles, 3 Marshall Atolls

(Australians Advance on New Guinea. Page 4.)

By James F. King

American air attacks on Japan's island outposts in the northern and central Pacific were announced yesterday by the Navy Department.

Striking in the dark from the Aleutians 750 miles away, two groups of Navy bombers raided Paramushiru, 1300 miles north of Tokio. The first group attacked Japanese installations on the southern coast of the island at midnight; the second, three hours later, bombed the northern end of the island.

The attacks in the central Pacific were made by Army Air Force planes and were directed against three atolls in the Marshall Islands, Kwajalein, Mille and Jaluit.

Heavy bombers attacked shore installations of Roi and Kwajalein Islands in the Kwajalein Atoll early Thursday, and later in the day low-flying Mitchells bombed and strafed airfield installations, gun emplacements and living spaces on Mille, and Dauntless dive bombers raided Tmiet and Imieji in the Jaluit Atoll, where shore facilities and three small vessels were damaged.

British, Yanks Speed Inland After Amphibious Invasion 28 Miles From Eternal City; Enemy Totally Off Guard

By Wes Gallagher

Algiers, Jan. 22 (AP).—American and British troops by the thousands landed practically without opposition on the beaches south of Rome and moved inland today in a daring, successful sea-borne blow that completely surprised the Germans and deeply outflanked the powerful "Gustav" and "Adolf Hitler" defense lines and nearly 200,000 Germans.

The Germans placed the scene 16 to 28 miles south of Rome on a 30-mile flat coast between the Tiber River mouth and the resort town of Nettuno, and they admitted loss of Nettuno Harbor.

Allied headquarters merely said it was south of Rome but described the assault as "another phase in our objective to take Rome." The landings caught the Nazis by "complete surprise" and "constitute a grave menace" to enemy communications, headquarters said.

'Satisfactory Progress' Announced

Troops who splashed ashore met "slight" resistance and are making "satisfactory progress" in their drive inland, it was announced hours after the predawn onslaught.

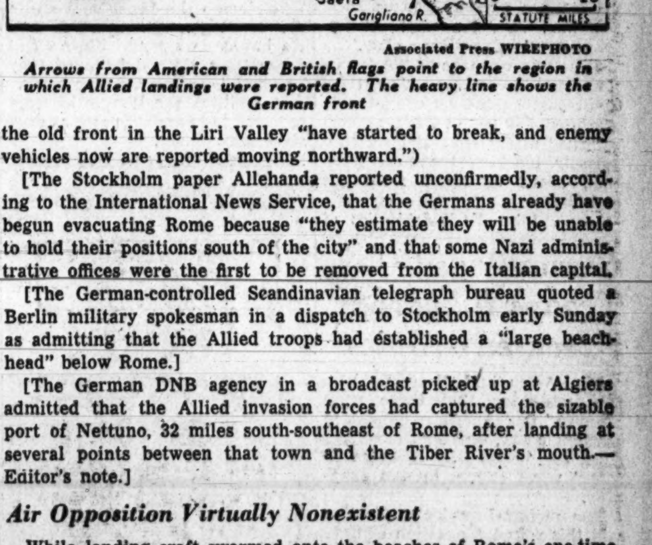
Admittedly a hazardous gamble, the great amphibious stroke that ended the Italian deadlock was timed perfectly with a new general Fifth Army offensive which fully occupied the stubborn German Tenth Army.

Don Whitehead, Associated Press correspondent who accompanied the amphibious force, wrote that the 2 a. m. landing "was so easy and simply done and caught the Germans so completely by surprise that as I write this dispatch six hours after the landing, American troops are literally standing with their mouths open and shaking their heads in utter amazement."

"I still don't believe it," a Fifth Army infantryman, veteran of other amphibious operations told him.

"Maybe the war is over and we don't know it," Lieut. Col. Edgar C. Doleman, said.

(The NBC correspondent in Naples reported the Germans facing the old front in the Liri Valley "have started to break, and enemy vehicles now are reported moving northward.")



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Arrows from American and British flags point to the region in which Allied landings were reported. The heavy line shows the German front

[The Stockholm paper Allehanda reported unconfirmedly, according to the International News Service, that the Germans already have begun evacuating Rome because "they estimate they will be unable to hold their positions south of the city" and that some Nazi administrative offices were the first to be removed from the Italian capital.

[The German-controlled Scandinavian telegraph bureau quoted a Berlin military spokesman in a dispatch to Stockholm early Sunday as admitting that the Allied troops had established a "large beachhead" below Rome.]

[The German DNB agency in a broadcast picked up at Algiers admitted that the Allied invasion forces had captured the sizable port of Nettuno, 32 miles south-southeast of Rome, after landing at several points between that town and the Tiber River's mouth.—Editor's note.]

Air Opposition Virtually Nonexistent

While landing craft swarmed onto the beaches of Rome's one-time bathing resorts, Allied airmen said German air activity was virtually nonexistent.

The invaders smashed straight inland toward the Appian Way and the roads leading to Rome. Severing of these routes, 12 and 22 miles from the coast, would trap the bulk of the German Tenth Army, 13 divisions strong, and leave the path to Rome itself virtually undefended.

There appeared to be little chance that the enemy could bring other divisions southward from the Po Valley to protect Rome over the bomb-blasted roads and railways. However, a violent German counterattack was expected to develop to stave off what might become a Nazi catastrophe.

Aiding the land forces, Allied heavy bombers today attacked railroad yards at Arezzo, Perugia, Terni and Pontecorvo. The first three are 100, 80 and 50 miles north of Rome, while Pontecorvo is one of the points on the "Adolf Hitler" line 6 miles behind the "Gustav Line" fighting front. Still further to seal off the Tenth Army from the scene of the Rome coast landings, heavy bombers also attacked the road defile at Terracina on the coast below the landings.

Allies Flank Foe, Land Near Rome

The secret of the success apparently was close coordination with the new ground offensive and the uninterrupted Allied air onslaught.

While the big fleet of landing craft, escorted by American, British, Greek, Dutch and French warships, moved in toward the beaches before dawn this morning, the Fifth Army erupted all along its front in an all-out assault from French positions in the mountains above Sant Elia to British lines along the coast.

This assault, with the air offensive that already had knocked out all but one of Rome's airfields and smashed German communications, was successfully designed to pin the Nazis in their defensive lines.

At dawn Allied planes began continuous cover over the new beachheads and the Tyrrhenian Sea route for supplies.

From the German acknowledgments it was apparent that the Allies had side-stepped the easily defended Pontine marshes and driven onto the solid beaches farther north. Only a few scattered hills bar the route to Rome, in contrast with mile after mile of mountains on the cross-Italy fronts of the Fifth and Eighth armies.

Gen. Sir Harold Alexander, commander of Allied forces on the Central Mediterranean Front, thus used the Allies' best developed technique of warfare—the amphibious landing—to threaten close to 200,000 Germans with entrapment.

A special communique late today named American Rear Admiral Frank J. Lowry of New York as commander of the entire naval phase of the operation, with Rear Admiral Thomas Troubridge of the British Navy directing British naval forces under him.

For more than a week Allied bombers and fighters of every description have been concentrating on German airdromes and communications in preparation for the landing, and late today an air force spokesman said photographs showed "all fighter bases of any consequence in the Rome area are inoperative except for one 3 miles from Rome at Guidonia."

The spokesman said railway blocks in the Rome area were "for the most part still effective" and that all railways in the Florence area had been severed except for one. Thus, he said, "it is impossible for the German air force to undertake sustained activity."

In addition Allied bombers attacked airfields in the Marseille area where the Germans are known to have based planes that use their radio-controlled glider bombs. The objective of the air forces was to isolate the battlefront both from reinforcements and supplies and from German air power. In all air operations, 20 enemy planes were shot down for a loss of five Allied aircraft.

Success of this broad program was confirmed by pilots returning from missions covering the landing forces. They said they had found no enemy aircraft and that there was little or no enemy artillery fire from the shore, although several Allied warships were firing continuous broadsides into targets several miles inland.

The Germans may repair some rail lines for varying periods but the present almost total dislocation was of extreme importance to the Tiber landings. Experts said the transportation blocking by the Fifteenth Air Force was one of the most complete jobs ever done, and while that force was working 150 miles north of Rome the Twelfth Air Force operated directly north of the city against both transport and airfields.

In the integrated attacks by the Fifth Army along the land front American troops forced their way across the Rapido River while French forces wrested two mountains from the enemy and the British captured additional villages on the north bank of the Garigliano River.

The Germans, preoccupied with this onset, launched several fierce counterattacks supported by tanks, only to be taken by surprise by the amphibious flanking attack.

The crossing of the Rapido River by the Americans was accomplished near San Angelo where the stream is 120 feet wide. With boats and field bridges they crossed the river only to run into a mine field and withering fire from well-entrenched Nazis. At latest reports they were battling the Germans in the area about 3 miles south of Cassino. American patrols which had crossed the Rapido earlier had predicted the fierce opposition that the main body met today.

This forward movement was pressed along a 20-mile front. On the north shore of the Garigliano, where the British established a bridgehead early in the week, they gained more ground, taking Trimonsueli and Vandra and fighting stiff German opposition in the Castleforte area. One German counterattack forming at Castelforte was broken up by Allied artillery.

The skies still were dominated by our planes; the only questionable aircraft we encountered were four unidentified planes which were believed to be ME-109's. They did not attack us.

The road junction town we attacked, which only this morning was such a hot flak alley that it shot up several strafing A-36 Invaders who were clearing the way for the landing troops, troubled us with only scattered ineffective ack-ack as we passed over, indicating that the Germans were either dispersing their antiaircraft fire or retreating.

As a matter of fact our formation was not even shot at up to the time one of our gunners yelled: "On the way! On the way! Everything okay! Everything okay."

The same was true of the formation in front of us. The third flight just behind us caught only scattered flak and all the aircraft returned safely after at least temporarily blocking the road junction, about 30 miles from the beachhead.

Lieut. John V. Budekiewicz of Dorchester, Mass., our pilot, was amazed. Previous missions over the area had resulted in "flak so thick you could walk on it."

But we went in free of flak and I watched the old 47th bomb group boys, the same gang which was credited with finally stopping the Kasserine Pass rout, lay their eggs right on Frosinone, knocking the buildings down to block the reinforcement road to Rome.

We were escorted by Spitfires of the Twelfth Air Support Command. Enroute to the target we encountered countless other friendly aircraft.

Lieut. Maurice Nordlund, 20-year-old P-51 photo reconnaissance pilot, told of seeing two Focke Wulfs bomb the beach and strafe the landing craft. Spitfires and Warhawks whipped down and drove them off and believed they knocked down one German plane.

In addition the Warhawks were reported to have shot down at least six enemy planes.

Camouflaged U. S. Troops Rumored Executed as Spies

The Army and Navy Register said yesterday that there were "rumors" that American snipers in the jungle war, wearing camouflage suits, are "summarily executed as spies" when caught by the Japanese.

The unofficial service publication said this raised a question of definition under international law. The Register quoted international law as saying that a person could be considered a spy only when "acting clandestinely or in false pretenses.

Clark Visits Landing Area, Is 'Delighted'

By Haig Nicholson

(Representing the Combined Allied Press)
(Distributed by the Associated Press)

With the Fifth Army in Italy, Jan. 22 (AP).—Gen. Mark Clark today made a dawn and dusk visit to the new Fifth Army landing areas south of Rome, where he saw American and British forces pressing forward against a so-far almost invisible enemy.

Upon returning from there, General Clark smilingly told me he was delighted with the progress.

The position tonight is that the landing forces, which include American Rangers and British Commandos, are steadily progressing inland to their first objectives.

Allied naval and military losses and casualties have been unbelievably light considering the size of the forces employed. Casualties among troops were caused principally by mines.

One officer described the operation as "like a military exercise in California."

Some opposition had been expected; there was almost none. There was no opposition from coastal batteries.

American troops landed without trouble. Not even the slender coastal garrison seemed to be in position, and among the early prisoners taken were four drunken Germans.

British troops on landing had to contend with mines and wire which caused a few casualties.

Spaatz Sees Nazi Air Force Ended Soon

By Gladwin Hill

London, Jan. 22 (AP).—Lieut. Gen. Carl A. Spaatz said today that, weather permitting the German air force is likely to be knocked out during the summer and he disclosed that American bombing operations now are limited only by weather with no limitation due to a shortage of planes, crews or facilities.

The newly named commander of the U. S. Strategic (long range) Air Forces for the two-way heavy bombardment campaign against Germany revealed that the U. S. Army Air Forces now is large enough so that it can and does bomb every day flying conditions permit.

In his first press conference since assuming his new command Gen. Spaatz also revealed that shuttle bombing between Britain and recently captured bases in Italy might play an important part in the campaign.

"Given the same sort of weather we had in the Mediterranean, I do not think the German air force could last very long," General Spaatz said.

In connection with his disclosure that only weather now limited the missions of the American Air Force, it was learned reliably that there now are nearly two crews for every bomber here.

Commenting on his shift from his former Mediterranean air post to his new command, General Spaatz said, "It is essential that an interchange of experience be provided for air forces from Italy and the United Kingdom."

This interchange of personnel, he added, is particularly necessary when conditions may require crews taking off from one area to land in the other.

General Spaatz said the maintenance of facilities in Italy—a key factor in shuttle bombing—is being carried out with a completeness comparable to that done in England and added that the job is keeping well ahead of the arrival of additional forces.

Regarding the possibility of American bombing attacks against Berlin, he said, "No part of Germany is beyond the range of our planes. Any part can be expected to be attacked."

Texas Colonel Gets Highest Reward

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 22 (AP).—Col. Neel Kearby, San Antonio, Tex., fighter pilot who shot down six Japanese planes in one fight, was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor today.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, in the first such ceremony in his Southwest Pacific Command, personally presented America's highest military award to Kearby before a small group of witnesses.

D. C. Pilot Helps Blast Nazi Center

By Kenneth L. Dixon

An Advanced Base in Italy, Jan. 21 (Delayed).—A German frontline air corps' headquarters, carefully hidden in what was previously considered "neutral" territory because of its proximity to the summer residence of Pope Pius XII, was reported destroyed today by dive-bombing A36 Invaders from the 12th Air Support Command.

FOX

Returning pilots, who had been painstakingly briefed for the special mission, said the Pope's summer home and surrounding areas of Castel Gandolfo, south of Rome, "never felt a thing."

Housed in Villa

The German "Flieger Corps" headquarters was housed in a villa near Frascati, south of Rome and only about five miles from Castel Gandolfo. The entire area had been voluntarily restricted by the Allies and our planes forbidden to fly over it. Apparently the Nazis learned of the restrictions and slipped in a headquarters to take advantage of it.

Two flights of eight Invaders each peeled out of a formation 10 minutes apart shortly after noon and scored 26 direct hits on the headquarters villa. Two bombs landed on the west wing of the building, causing a tremendous explosion which the pilots said enveloped the entire villa, sending up clouds of black smoke.

"Most of our bombs hit the target and I'm sure we knocked out the whole building," said Lieut Marin J. Snider of Elkton, Mich., leader of one of the flights. "There was no activity around the villa and no flak. It looked like we surprised them."

"The Germans thought they'd pull a fast one when they put their headquarters so near the Pope's home," said Lieut. William M. Fox of 2000 37th st. se., Washington, the other flight leader, "but our bombs were right on the target and Castel Gandolfo never felt a thing."

Wife Is Secretary To Senator Willis

2000 Tons of Bombs Hit Magdeburg

assault in a year against London.

The widespread night operations cost the British 52 bombers, one of the heaviest losses suffered by the RAF, although a total of around 1000 planes were believed to have been involved so that the losses were probably kept down to 5 per cent.

In an effort puny by comparison, Hitler sent 90 planes against Britain in two waves, but only 30 reached London and at least 10 were shot down by British night fighters and ground defenses. They dropped 90 tons of bombs on Britain.

A German military spokesman quoted by the Berlin radio said that the planes used by the Germans were of a type "so far unknown to the enemy." He added that "nothing further can be said for the time being about the strategic and tactical purpose of this new attack."

An American in the RAF, Lieut. Chuck Hayden, Los Angeles, a bombardier on a Halifax, said of the Magdeburg raid, that "you could see the city blocks outlined in fire."

The Air Ministry said that the German high command, thinking the bombers were headed for Berlin, threw up every available squadron to break up the attackers. The battle raged from the coast to the target and back to the coast again.

The ground defenses at Magdeburg were not so strong as those at Berlin, the Air Ministry said.

Magdeburg is a city of 300,000 astride main railways to Leipzig, Kassel and Hamburg. Its principal industry is iron-working, and a Krupp branch producing tanks is among its factories. There also are chemical, rubber, explosive and synthetic oil plants located there, along with one of Junkers' principal planes engine works.

New Invasion Role Reported Given Rommel

LONDON, Jan. 22 (AP).—Adolf Hitler was reported today by the Daily Express to have appointed his twice-beaten former "Desert Fox," Marshal Erwin Rommel, as inspector-general for defense of Europe.

Rommel theoretically becomes Germany's supreme anti-invasion chief.

Actually, however, an inspector-general in the German army seldom gives orders to a field commander and it is believed Field Marshal Karl von Rundstedt will remain in active charge of defending Hitler's Atlantic wall.

Transfer Reported

The Express quoted neutral reports saying Von Rundstedt, who more than once has shown open scorn for Nazism and has been quoted as referring to Hitler as "an inflated lance corporal," has been moved to southeastern Europe where he will be in charge of the areas at the rear of Field Marshal Fritz von Mannstein retreating from Russia.

According to the best information available in London, this is likely to prove a temporary shift. It is believed Von Rundstedt has been assigned to a special task to prepare the ground for Von Mannstein's retreating armies and then will return to his post as anti-invasion field commander in the West.

Never Entirely Trusted

Von Rundstedt, known as the "high priest" of German strategy, never has been entirely trusted by Hitler, but the dictator never has been able to find a substitute for his genius in the ranks of dyed-in-the-wool Nazis. For this reason, it is understood here that Hitler ordered Rommel to treat Von Rundstedt with kid gloves for fear Von Rundstedt would resign again as he did in 1941, or exploit his influence among German army officers to stage a revolt.

In his role as inspector-general Rommel would be able to keep an eye on Von Rundstedt, who outranks Rommel both in age and seniority of service, and officiate rather as Hitler's right hand man than as commander in the field.

Surprised? Who? Not We! Nazis Assert

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—Obviously caught by surprise by the Fifth Army amphibious operation south of Rome, the Germans contended tonight in a DNB dispatch to European papers outside Germany that "the landings is no surprise to the German military command" which had been convinced "it would be necessary."

The wireless dispatch, recorded by the Federal Communications Commission, said the landing was "one of those enemy operations that—as it were—have been in the air for many weeks" and that German reserves "appeared on the scene as soon as the enemy operation had been carried out" and now were engaged in "heavy fighting."

Yugoslav Partisans Press Attack on Split Railway Line

London, Jan. 22 (AP).—Yugoslav Partisans have pressed their attack against the main rail line running from Budapest down through Zagreb to the port of Split on the Adriatic, and have gone over to the offensive in bitter fighting in the mountains of Croatia, the Yugoslav Liberation army communique said today.

The Algiers radio declared the Partisans are battering the equivalent of 40 German divisions sorely needed on other fronts, but this figure probably is too high. Previous London estimates have been that Marshal Josip Broz (Tito) is engaging 15 or 20 German divisions.

The Algiers radio said Tito's present strength is 300,000 with new volunteers joining daily.

About 120 miles of the main Budapest-Split railway from Karlovac to Gracac has been rendered useless to German communications in bitter fighting, the Partisans said.

The Partisans lost Perusic, seven miles north of Gospic, but in the area of Ogulin, on the branch line to Fiume, and Karlovac, on the main line, 30 miles southwest of Zagreb, Tito's forces counterattacked after beating down German thrusts on a stretch of railway from Gospic down to Gracac.

The communique disclosed street fighting still is going on in German-occupied Tuzla, which the Partisans attacked yesterday.

War Sidelights

Polish Force Reviewed by Gen. Patton

Cairo, Jan. 22 (AP).—Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., commander of the American Seventh Army in its victorious Sicilian campaign, today reviewed Polish troops in Egypt whose armored columns stretched for several miles across the desert.

The Polish commander, Gen. Wladyslaw Anders, presented Patton an eagle from his own collar "as a token of the relations between the Polish and American armies."

The review was held just as strong veteran British forces completed the largest armored maneuvers ever held in the Middle East, covering the entire desert between Cairo and Suez.

Stockholm, Jan. 22 (AP).—A Budapest dispatch to the newspaper Dagens Nyheter reported today that German troop reinforcements "in great strength" have arrived in Bulgaria.

Britain Sets $20 As Top Mine Pay

London, Jan. 23 (AP).—A national minimum weekly wage for Britain's 700,000 coal miners—$20 for experienced underground workers and $18 for surface workers—was announced tonight by the National Tribunal for Industry.

It marks an increase of up to $3.40 over the old minimum set in 1942 but falls below the demands of the Miners' Federation for minimums of $24 for the men in the pits and $22 for those doing surface work.

Glider-Bomb Blow At Convoy Beaten

The Liberator Of Leningrad

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

GEN. LEONID GOVOROV, who is commnading Red troops lifting the two-year German siege of Leningrad, Russia's second largest city

2 Ships Damaged In 4-Day Battle With Subs, Planes

London, Jan. 22 (AP).—German planes using new radio-controlled glider bombs and a great swarm of U-boats attacked an important Atlantic convoy in the Bay of Biscay recently, but were decisively defeated with damage to only two of the convoy's ships, an Admiralty-Air Ministry communique disclosed tonight.

The battle in all its phases lasted four days and three nighs. At least one submarine was sunk, two probably were sunk, and several others were damaged, and a number of big enemy bombers were shot down.

To protect the convoy, the first attacked by long-range German bombers in more than a year, British and Canadian warships were rushed to the scene from all directions and U. S. and British planes were flown into the area from Gibraltar, the newly obtained bases on the Azores and from England itself.

Attack Made Off Azores

The action took place "some weeks ago," the communique said, starting as the convoy was proceeding northward about midway between the Azores and the coast of Portugal.

A U-boat was illuminated on the surface shortly before dawn and throughout that day and the following night the convoy's escorts waged a desperate battle with submarines, dropping patterns of depth charges. Oil patches appeared on the surface several times.

Once a U-boat's periscope broke water within 400 yards of a frigate. During the second night of the attack one submarine was forced to the surface and sunk with shells. Seventeen survivors were picked up.

During this time hostile aircraft had been observed shadowing the convoy from cloud cover and out of range of ships guns. Allied planes chased them away and damaged one Junkers.

For about 15 hours on the second day the attacks relented, when the convoy entered the range of British based bombers, but on the third night it was estimated about ten U-boats were clustering near in an effort to waylay the convoy anew, and the battle continued again until daylight, probably destroying another U-boat.

Finally the U-boats were warded off without having caused any damage, but the enemy then changed his tactics and made repeated air attacks with bombers based in France.

Fifteen Nazi planes, attacking 600 miles from the Ile D'Ouessant off the westernmost tip of France, converged on the convoy and pressed home determined attacks for 2½ hours, damaging the two ships.

Enemy planes returned again the following day, but caused no further damage and all the ships reached port.

One British flying officer said the glider bomb "looked just like a small monoplane." It did "the most unusual acrobatics," he added, "went all over the place, and it seemed the Germans were trying to guide it into a vessel. It fell into the sea, however, exploded and burned on the surface."

Glider Bombs Fall

Glider bombs were used on a smaller scale with similar lack of success on Mediterranean convoys, although some might have sunk the Italian battleship Roma as it fled toward Allied haven after Italy's capitulation.

Other four-engined planes, Focke-Wulf 200's, also attacked the convoy, using ordinary bombs.

The convoy was protected by ships of the Royal Navy and Royal Canadian Navy, by Catalinas and Venturas of the U. S. Navy; Hudsons and Flying Fortresses of the coastal command operating from Gibraltar and the Azores, and by Liberators and Sunderlands from British bases. Coastal command planes probably sank one of the U-boats.

3-Power Unity Increased, Says Red Spokesman

By Eddy Gilmore

Moscow, Jan. 22 (AP).—Foreign diplomats read with pleasure today an assertion by Alexander Shcherbakov, director of the Soviet Information Bureau and one of the rising young men in the Communist Party, who said that unity and confidence among the Soviet Union, Great Britain and the United States had increased, rather than diminished.

Any hopes that Hitler and his henchmen might have had that they had driven a political wedge between the Soviet Union and her Allies have been dispelled, Shcherbakov said.

(The assurance came after Pravda, Communist Party newspaper, had attacked Wendell Willkie as a "political gambler" for the tone of an article on Russia and printed a Cairo report that some British officials had negotiated with German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop.)

Addressing on the anniversary of Lenin's death a gathering of Russia's leaders, including Premier Marshal Joseph Stalin, Shcherbakov said "the Hitlerites' plans are based upon splitting the democratic countries but they have failed. The confidence and unity among the countries of the anti-Hitlerite coalitions have increased."

The statement was taken in Moscow diplomatic circles as an official answer to skeptics who might have asked if Russia and her Allies are drifting apart politically despite the Teheran and Moscow conferences.

Russians Nearing Big Rail Junction

From the southern shores of Lake Ilmen, below toppled Novgorod, northward to the Baltic coast, the German army was trying to avert a major military disaster.

In many sectors their dead were being counted by the thousands and in liberated Leningrad long lines of prisoners already were moving through the streets, it was disclosed by Soviet dispatches to Moscow.

It appeared certain that the Germans could not escape losing many more than the 40,000 killed and 4000 captured already tallied by the Russians, for the Red Army had taken a strangle hold on too many chunks of the vital rail network below Leningrad, and was swiftly closing in on the remainder.

Photographs reaching Moscow from Leningrad showed German captives in special winter equipment. Associated Press correspondent Eddy Gilmore observed that this was the first such equipment he had known to be used by the Germans in three winters in Russia. The soldiers, furthermore, were tall, strapping men, totally unlike the typical shivering "Winter Fritz" frequently the subject of Russian cartoons.

The German command communique told of increasing Soviet attacks in the area between the Pripet and Berezina Rivers—the region west of Rechitsa—and said that "in the difficult forest district of northern Finland" strong Russian attacks had been launched. These latter were said to have been repulsed by Hessian and Thuringian grenadiers.

Aerial Photos Aided Victory, Experts Say

By the Associated Press

Aerial photograph and mapping, accurately accomplished under trying conditions and at record-breaking speeds, contributed materially to Allied victories at Kula Gulf in the Pacific and at Tunis, two military map experts said yesterday.

FITZGERALD

A Marine colonel said that in a matter of hours instead of a minimum of three days expected for such a mission, aerial map makers of the Army, Navy and Marines completed composite pictures of the reef-pocked and hitherto uncharted Kula Gulf—delivering the pictures to our task force even as it steamed against the Japs.

"We feel that we contributed materially to the success of that operation," said Lieut.-Col. E. E. Pollock. "At least 20 per cent of the Kula Gulf was unfit for navigation, and the existence of submerged reefs was of tremendous concern to the ships' captains entering this body of water.

"We accomplished what had never been done before—doing hydrographic mapping with nothing but photographs in the interests of finding submerged menaces."

Accurate Artillery Fire

And Col. James G. Hall of the Army Air Forces said that aerial photographs made in a single morning over a 4500-square-mile area of the final Tunisian Front line were so accurate that our artillery, firing only from photographs, scored direct hits on enemy guns in many instances "and in no case was a position missed by more than 5 yards."

The officers spoke at a meeting of the American Society of Photogrammetry, which deals with the science of converting aerial photographs into detailed contour maps.

At the same meeting, Gen. H. H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces, in an address read for him by another officer, said that fissures in Japan's defensive network are becoming more and more apparent and "one of these days we will be able to hit Japan where it hurts most, within the Honshu citadel itself."

Fitzgerald Wins Award

Army Lieut. Col. Gerald Fitzgerald, the man chiefly responsible for the development of a revolutionary technique of aerial photography known as the "tri-metrogon" method, received the society's "Fairchild Award" in recognition of his achievements.

The technique involves the use of three wide-angle cameras so placed in an airplane as to secure aerial photographs of the landscape from one horizon to another.

Colonel Fitzgerald served for 26 years in the United States Geological Survey, where he rose from temporary field assistant to senior topographical engineer in charge of one of the survey's toughest jobs, the mapping of Alaska.

Armless Vet Starts Tour of Inspiration

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—Charles C. McGonegal of Sunol, Calif., lost both arms when a grenade exploded in his hand in France in 1918.

Discharged from the Army, he returned to the United States determined that his handicap would not rob him of a useful life.

So well did he succeed that he now owns a ranch, supports a family and performs such feats as flying airplanes, driving automobiles, playing cards, operating a typewriter and shaving himself.

Today the 48-year-old veteran began a Nation-wide morale-building tour for the American Legion.

In hospitals across the country he will tell soldiers wounded in the present conflict that "what I have done, any handicapped soldier will be able to do."

National field secretary of the Legion, McGonegal told a press conference:

"When I was discharged I asked myself, 'am I dead or alive?' I said, 'alive.' On that I started to build. I never lost hope.

I can do anything I want to do, but I have to do it my own way. That's the only difference."

The veteran, whose "arms" are applances known as double hooks, said the reaction of the wounded at the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington was "wonderful—they didn't want me to leave."

Marine Sergt. Theodore S. Jones, 23, of Amdison, Wis., who lost both arms and a leg at Guadalcanal, thought McGonegal was an artificial arms salesman when he visited the Oakland Naval Base, Oakland, Calif. But after hearing McGonegal's story, the Marine exclaimed:

"By gad, I'm going to get married."

He did, too, McGonegal recalled, adding:

"He is a smart boy. I won't be surprised if he becomes Governor."

Australians Push Toward Madang

Gain in Ramu Area; Trapped Japs Flee Under Air Attack

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea (Sunday), Jan. 23 (AP).—A jungle drive by Australians in the Ramu Valley against the shipping base of Madang, a costly retreat of trapped Japanese under fire of strafing planes on the New Guinea coast nearby, and a 15-to-6 air victory over Rabaul, New Britain, were reported today by headquarters.

The Australians, veterans of Africa, are pushing along the Faria River toward Kankaryo in an inland jungle area about 40 miles south of Madang. Kittyhawks and Thunderbolts supported them by dive-bombing Japanese positions.

These Australians thus resumed a drive which began last September after the fall of Lae, 140 miles southeast of Madang.

On the northeast New Guinea coast, Japanese trapped below Madang between American invasion forces at Saidor and Australian captors of Sio were reported to have been spotted by Airacobras Friday fleeing the 25 miles from Reiss Point to Gali.

The retreating columns were strafed, "causing numerous casualties," and Boston attack planes bombed and strafed other trapped elements in the villages of Gali and Roanji.

Today, the second anniversary of the Japanese landing at Rabaul, headquarters announced that Thursday low-flying Mitchell medium bombers from the Solomons attacked Vunakanau airdrome, destroying three grounded fighters and silencing gun positions.

The Japanese sent up 55 interceptors which were engaged by a large force of fighters escorting the Mitchells. Fifteen of the Japanese were shot down and three others were listed as probables. Six of the raiders were lost.

Before dawn the next morning, Liberator heavy bombers attacked the Rabaul town area and started fires.

On the south central coast of New Britain, the enemy air base of Gasmata was attacked five times Friday by Beaufighters, Kittyhawks, Spitfires and Beauforts.

Lines Draw Tight

Cleavages Widen in U.S., Jackson Says

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Jan. 22.—Cleavage between Rightists and Leftists is becoming increasingly wide in the United States, religious controversies are increasing, and "racial animosities and competitions are assuming a more ominous and sullen aspect," Associated Justice Robert H. Jackson of the United States Supreme Court said today.

He addressed a luncheon-meeting of the judicial section of the New York State Bar Association at the Waldorf-Astoria. The association concluded its sixty-seventh annual meeting tonight with its annual dinner at the hotel.

During the next 50 years, Justice Jackson said, it seems likely that "those who have all the time been looking wistfully toward the right are going to move to the right, and perhaps do so recklessly and ruthlessly; and those who have been looking hopefully to the left, will move farther to the left, and possibly extremely and lawlessly."

The war is a struggle between "irreconcilable philosophies," he said, adding, "can we in America say with assurance that our own people, in numbers that begin to be significant, do not entertain much the same divergent and almost uncompromisable outlooks upon life?

Justice Jackson said it was not the function of the judiciary to determine "what the philosophy or policy of our organized society shall be," but he concluded with the statement, "I can think of nothing more important to the prestige of the judicial function in the troubled times ahead than that it hold to the ideal that if they don't want a decision on the law and the evidence, they must not get into an American court."

Farley Is Silent On Plan to Return To Party Councils

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—James A. Farley had no comment tonight on the suggestion of former Gov. E. D. Rivers of Georgia, at a meeting of the Democratic National Committee in Washington that Farley be brought back into party councils.

In answer to a question as to his reaction to the selection of Robert E. Hannegan as new national chairman, a post once held by Farley, he said:

"He's a great fellow and one for whom I have an extremely high regard.

"I personally congratulate him on the great honor conferred upon him by his party."

Postlude

Light Music Features Bill Of Symphony

The National Symphony Orchestra, Charles O'Connell, guest conductor, present the sixth in the series of "15-30" concerts in Constitution Hall on Saturday evening. Program: Overture, The Barber of Seville (Paisiello); Symphony No. 8 in F Major (Beethoven); Invitation to the Dance (Weber-Weingartner); Overture to an Italian Comedy (Benjamin); Canope-Minstrels-Clair de Lune (Debussy); Piece Heroique (Franck).

Music devoted almost exclusively to merriment and light-heartedness was selected by Charles O'Connell, guest conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, for performance at the third in the season's "15-30" concerts in Constitution Hall last night. But for two Debussy preludes, Canope and Claire de Lune, and Cesar Franck's Piece Heroique, substituted at the last minute for Chaikovski's Capriccio Italien, profundity was barred.

Somewhat larger than its predecessor, the audience of "young people" was particularly taken with the three Debussy preludes and the Frank Piece Heroique. Their applause called forth an encore, Bach's chorale Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring, which Mr. O'Connell introduced with a few well chosen remarks.

D. C. Colonel, Safe in Action, Hit by Truck

Lieut. Col. Earl E. Holmes, 41, of 6447 Barnaby st. nw., went unscathed through four months of Guadalcanal action as he directed cargo traffic against a background of attacking Jap warships, dive-bombers and snipers—only to receive critical injuries when, on the first day of the Marines' arrival at a rear base for rest and recreation, he was hit by a truck in a blackout.

But, "just the breaks," shrugs Colonel Holmes.

It was no surprise to find the colonel running Marine transport on a beach "somewhere in the Southwest Pacific when the Marines recently landed to set up a forward base, according to Tech. Sergt. Samuel E. Stavisky, a Marine Corps combat correspondent, former assistant city editor of The Washington Post.

Stavisky pointed out that Colonel Holmes had loaded and unloaded the cargo on the beaches of Guadalcanal from the very first day of the invasion.

The quartermaster transport officer comes from a Washington law-enforcing family: his father is Inspector William E. Holmes and his uncle is Capt. Nelson O. Holmes, of the Metropolitan Police. A one-time lawyer, he was operating Earls, Inc., an advertising agency and printing plant, when called to active duty in November, 1940. He believes he was the first member of the Washington Reserve Battalion to enter active duty.

Colonel Holmes probably saw more ships bombed, burned and sunk than any other Marine on Guadalcanal, from his beach position which was always primary or secondary target, Sergeant Stavisky said.

tacks on the Marshalls and all our planes returned safely. During the attacks on Paramushiru, antiaircraft fire and one enemy fighter offered the only opposition and all our planes returned without damage.

Army and Navy bombers, in what appear to be "softening up" operations, have been attacking the Marshall Islands almost daily since mid-November when American forces seized the Japanese-occupied Gilbert Islands, approximately 500 miles to the southeast.

Paramushiru, northernmost of the Kurile Islands, has been raided five times before the Thursday attacks but this is the first time that Navy planes have been used for this purpose. The last Army Air Forces raid occurred on December 31.

Cabinet Split On Pardon For Richardson

By Lyn Crost

Associated Press Staff Writer

Members of the President's Cabinet were reported reliably yesterday to be split on the question of a presidential pardon for the commanding general of the Army's Hawaiian Department who was cited in contempt of court last year for refusing to obey a writ of habeas corpus issued by a Federal judge in Honolulu.

This information comes from unusually reliable sources who have followed the case since Lieut. Gen. Robert C. Richardson, jr., refused last year to comply with an order by Federal Judge Delbert E. Metzger to present in court two prisoners of German ancestry who had been held in Hawaii by the Army.

The question of issuing a pardon for Richardson, it was reported, has been laid before the President but his attitude was not revealed.

The deadline for appealing the contempt charge in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco is tomorrow, but Justice Department officials yesterday declined to say whether an appeal would be filed.

Once filed, however, an appeal could be made to the United States Supreme Court for a review, which, if granted, would place the case before the high court without further action by the Circuit Court of Appeals, Justice officials explained.

The outcome of the case is expected to set far-reaching precedents governing military-civilian relations in this country during wartime, and has been described by close observers as a "testing ground" for the evolution of military rule in war zones.

The dispute began when Metzger imposed a $5000 fine on Richardson who, in turn, issued a military order, since rescinded, forbidding trials in Hawaii on writs of habeas corpus and imposing a $5000 fine on any judge who violated the order.

WFA Reshuffle Curbs Powers Held by Hutson

Reorganization of the War Food Administration and creation of an Office of Price to be directed by Ashley Sellers within the WFA framework were announced yesterday by Marvin Jones, the War Food Administrator.

Under the reshuffling, the Food Distribution Administration and the Food Production Administration become the Office of Distribution and the Office of Production, respectively, and three agencies formerly under FPA become independent with their directors reporting directly to Jones.

Hutson's Status Now

The three are: The Agricultural Adjustment Agency, the Farm Security Administration, and the Soil Conservation Service. They had previously reported to J. B. Hutson, FPA director.

Hutson remains director of the Office of Production, but his powers were apparently further limited in the reorganization by a redefinition of duties of the Commodity Credit Corp., of which he is the head.

After May 1, CCC must relinquish responsibility for procurement and distribution programs it is now administering to the Office of Distribution and must make distribution of food acquired by the various CCC loan programs "as may be requested by the Office of Distribution and approved by the administrator."

CCC will continue to "procure and import" food from Canada and sugar from the Caribbean area, but the distribution office will be "responsible for the preparation of directives for the foreign procurement of food."

Considered "Top Men"

Hutson and Roy B. Hendrickson, former director of the Food Distribution Administration, who recently went with the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, were generally considered "top men" within the WFA.

Sellers, who heads the new Office of Price—which WFA aides see as very important, as it will deal with farm price regulations, price support programs, and food pricing matters generally—is a native of Georgia but more recently is from Texas, the home State of both the WFA chief and his executive assistant, Grover B. Hill. Sellers has been in the WFA for several months as an assistant administrator.

OPA Relief Asked As Home Stocks Hit Canned Food

By the Associated Press

Arguing that sales of canned vegetables have fallen off acutely because housewives' pantry shelves are so well stocked with the home-canned variety, commercial canners are putting considerable pressure on the Office of Price Administration to take vegetables off the ration list or at least cut point values sharply.

Before the war, a representative of the canners figured yesterday, only about 25 or 30 of every 100 housewives engaged in home-canning. He estimated that at present there are well-stocked pantry shelves of home canned goods in 80 of every 100 homes.

Arguing from this standpoint, the canners have taken their case to OPA and report a "sympathetic reception."

2651 Vessels Added to U. S. Cargo Fleet

By Walter Wood

American shipyards have sent 2651 vessels down the ways since Pearl Harbor, approximately twice the number of the augmented merchant fleet when the United States entered the war, the Maritime Commission reported yesterday.

Deadweight tonnage of the ships launched since December, 1941, totals 27,420,533, it was said.

The "victory fleet," in addition to sailing supplies to the fighting fronts abroad, returned with vital war materials — bauxite, hemp, scrap metal and tin among them.

Weapons used by the enemy were also brought back to the United States for comparative study by American militarists.

These facts were disclosed as the Maritime Commission made its annual report to Congress.

The men and officers who man the ships are now 125,000 strong. The War Shipping Administration's Recruitment and Manning Organization "brought back to the sea more than 20,000 experienced sailors" last year, it was said.

The Maritime Commission report, hailing "the greatest shipbuilding feats in history," stated that the expansion of shipyards during the last fiscal year made possible the unprecedented record of completing 1869 vessels, aggregating 19,238,626 deadweight tons during the calendar year just ended.

Construction centered around the Liberty Ship—the "work horse of the seas"—which is carrying arms, food and other supplies to United Nations forces around the globe, but there was not curtailment in the C-type and tanker programs, the commission said.

By the end of June, 1943, plans were virtually complete for the new Victory ship — faster than the Liberty and otherwise improved—and the S S United Victory, the first of more than 300 contracted for, was launched little more than a week ago at the yard in Portland, Oreg., operated by Henry J. Kaiser.

DIAMOND DESIGNS
LUDWIG van Berquen, a Belgian lapidist, who conceived the idea of reducing diamonds to dust that could be used in cutting other diamonds also conceived a good idea about design.
HE learned how to give the stones depth and body by cutting them "facet-wise" underneath so the eye could catch the bright flashes of light coming through: broad face of "table" on top. Thus the "rose-cut" was originated about the year 1500.
IN the 17th Century, the "brilliant" cut was invented, the shape now seen in engagement rings. There are many designs, but in all the artisan strives to get the many facets at the exact point to bring out the flashing light and color.

Roosevelt Moves On Behalf of Jews

Uruguay, Cuba

Bolivia Fails Twice to Win Recognition

Montevideo, Uruguay, Jan. 22 (AP). The Uruguayan government has decided not to establish diplomatic relations with the month-old revolutionary Bolivian regime "while present circumstances persist," it was announced today.

The foreign office said yesterday that the exchange of information among the American republics on the Bolivian revolution had been completed.

Argentina so far is the only Latin-American country to recognize the government of Maj. Gualberto Villarroel who displaced Enrique Penaranda on December 20.

Havana, Jan. 22 (AP).—Cuban Minister of State Emeterio Santovenia announced today that his government had decided not to recognize the new revolutionary government of Bolivia.

Americans Invited

An invitation to representatives of the press, labor organizations and university students to visit Bolivia to learn first-hand of "the truly democratic principles" developing under the new government was issued yesterday by President Gualberto Villarroel through Fernando Iturralde, foreign affairs undersecretary now in Washington.

Iturralde interpreted the Villarroel's invitation as indicative of "his strong desire to show that his government is prodemocratic, not pro-Axis, and firmly attached to the cause of the United States."

The Bolivian people, Iturralde declared, feel that America is doing "a tremendous injustice" to their nation by refusing to recognize the new government. He is confident, he said, that it will declare war on the Axis as soon as is possible under its constitution.

U. S. Departments Told to Extend Refugee Help

By The Associated Press

President Roosevelt created a War Refugee Board last night and directed it to attempt the rescue of "the victims of enemy oppression who are in imminent danger of death."

The board consists of the Secretaries of State, Treasury and War, who are empowered to appoint a full-time executive director to administer the refugee assistance program.

A White House statement said the President's action was designed to bring about immediate rescue from the Nazis of "as many as possible of the persecuted minorities of Europe—racial, religious or political—all civilian victims of enemy savagery."

The White House said that Mr. Roosevelt stressed that it was urgent for action to be taken at once "to forestall the plan of the Nazis to exterminate all the Jews and other persecuted minorities in Europe."

Decision as to how the goal could be accomplished was left to the board. It could, perhaps, make use of the International Red Cross, neutral diplomatic missions, or even underground movements in occupied lands.

Mr. Roosevelt stated, the White House said, that he expected to get the cooperation of all the United Nations and other foreign governments in the program.

The State Department was directed to appoint special attaches with diplomatic status, on recommendation of the board, to be stationed at spots where help might be rendered to war refugees.

The board will be charged not only with developing plans for the rescue of oppressed peoples, but also with working out measures for their transportation, maintenance and relief and for setting up "havens of temporary refuge."

Women Found Able to Handle 80% of Men's Jobs in Plants

Pittsburg, Jan. 22 (AP).—A report by the Industrial Hygiene Foundation declared today that a study disclosed women can do about 80 per cent of the war-plant jobs performed by men and expressed the belief that women have made themselves a permanent place in industry.

The study was made for the foundation by Dr. C. O. Sappington of Chicago, industrial health specialist, who visited 54 war plants in 10 Eastern, Southeast and Midwest States. The plants employ about half a million persons, 131,000 of them women.

Among other findings, the 40-page report, entitled "Health Problems of Women in Industry," disclosed that:

Married women with young children "apparently offered the greatest and most difficult problem and the one most frequently encountered in this survey."

The chief loss of time in women is caused by their inability to do two jobs, the one at home and the other in the factory.

While sick absences are higher for women, their accident rates are, generally speaking, lower than men.

More older women are being employed, but by far the greatest number working are between 20 and 29 years old.

There is a trend toward the increase of nonindustrial sickness and industrial accidents for both men and women at the present time.

The occurrence of pulmonary tuberculosis, especially showing a high rate in younger women generally, should give added incentive to prevention.

Of the working mother problem, Dr. Sappington said:

"The problem was common to most plants visited and appeared the chief cause of fatigue in women workers because of lack of proper rest and recreation. The common solution is not now evident but in certain areas the building of day nurseries has apparently been the best move."

Voice for Labor Urged by AFL in Postwar Planning

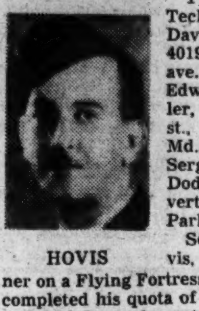
Miami, Fla., Jan. 22 (AP).—An American Federation of Labor committee today urged labor representation on all national delegations with a voice in shaping the postwar world, and said that to limit such bodies to Government officials seems "highly undemocratic."

The AFL's postwar planning committee, headed, by Vice President Matthew Woll, made public the first section of a report on which the federation executive council will act next week. Another proposal made by the committee is that labor attaches be assigned to the staffs of U. S. Ambassadors and Ministers.

Over Germany

3 D. C. Area Men Missing After Raid

Three Washington area men in the Air Corps have been missing in action since December 22, when they went on a raid over Germany.



HOVIS

They are Technical Sergt. David M. Hovis, 4019 Kansas ave. nw.; Lieut. Edward T. Mueller, 3607 Tilden st., Brentwood, Md., and Staff Sergt. Herschel Dodd, 4911 Calvert rd., College Park, Md.

Sergeant Hovis, 33, tail gunner on a Flying Fortress, had nearly completed his quota of 25 missions, and had been decorated with the Air Medal and an Oak Leaf Cluster.

MUELLER

A native of Stanley, N. C., Hovis, 33, had lived in the District 10 years. He operated a gasoline station at 7801 Georgia ave. nw. His sister, Mrs. C. W. Spargo, makes her home at the Kansas ave. address.

Lieutenant Mueller, 23, pilot of a B-17, was born in Washington, attended the Mount Rainier High School and was employed in the District by the Railway Express Agency when he entered the Air Corps in 1942. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Mueller of Brentwood, and has a brother, Pvt. Melvin Mueller, serving in the South Pacific.

DODD

Sergeant Dodd, 23, who was decorated with the Distinguished Flying Cross for his participation in the bombardment of the Ploesti oil refineries in Rumania August 1, was serving as gunner and radio operator on a Liberator. He had previously been decorated with the Air Medal and the Oak Leaf Cluster.

He enlisted immediately after Pearl Harbor His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herschel Dodd, make their home at 2855 Monroe st. ne., and his wife, Mrs. Zoe Dodd, lives at the Calvert rd. address.

Woman Seeks Furlough for Son, Enlisted at 15

Cleveland, Jan. 22 (AP).—Mrs. Bert A. Gerson sought President Roosevelt's help today in obtaining a furlough for her son, Harold, 17-year-old Army private who, she said, enlisted at 15 and has not been home since.

In a letter to the President, Mrs. Gerson said she wrote that he was her last resort in getting a "furlough for my son who has been in overseas service in the Army infantry for 32 months without once having been home."

The mother said the youth "will be 18 on January 31, having enlisted at the age of a little past 15. . . . We had hoped that he would be granted a leave by this time as he has written that he has been hospitalized. . . . At present time we think he is on New Georgia Island (in the South Pacific) due to a Christmas Eve broadcast on which a relative heard his greetings to us. . . ."

"Do you think I'm asking too much?" she concluded.

Symphony Acts to Provide Music for U. S. Employes

Plans that will enable the National Symphony Orchestra to fill effectively the recreational needs of thousands of music-hungry Federal employes were announced yesterday by E. R. Finkenstaedt, secretary of the orchestra association's board of directors.

For the past month a series of conferences have been held between orchestra representatives, representatives of the two groups representing the majority of Federal employes, the Federal Recreational Council and the Federal Recreation Committee, and Dr. Henry F. Hubbard, assistant to the chairman of the Council of Personnel Administration. As a result, the nucleus of a permanent Government committee to cooperate with the National Symphony in making its services more readily available to Federal employes has been set up under the chairmanship of Civil Service Commissioner Arthur S. Flemming. Vice chairmen are Robert M. Holmes, jr., president of the Federal Employes Recreation Council; Marshall Stalley, president of the Federal Recreation Committee, and Mrs. Hans A. Klagsbrunn, representing the National Symphony. The secretary is Miss Laura Nicholson of the War Hospitality Committee.

Immediate plans call for the National Symphony Orchestra to give next season a series of three or more popular concerts of great symphonic music exclusively for Federal employes, and to enlarge the services of the National Symphony Forum.

The National Symphony Forum is an advanced course of music appreciation that was instituted primarily for Federal employes a year ago.

Treide Asks Manpower Ceilings Here

Establishment of employment ceilings and manpower priorities committees in critical areas in War Manpower Commission Region 4, which includes Washington, "will be necessary," Henry E. Treide, regional manpower director, said yesterday.

After meeting with top WMC officials of the region, Treide stated, "A substantial part of the more than seven billion dollars worth of war contracts for planes, ships and other war and essential supplies that have been let in this region remain to be completed. The job set for this year is greater than the one we completed last year."

Region 4 also includes Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and North Carolina.

In a move designed to carry on the main phase of the Washington manpower stabilization program, the area labor-management committee yesterday extended the deadline for "locally needed" establishments to file applications for continuance of their "protected" status to the end of February.

Constituting the most difficult manpower problem, according to WMC officials, "locally needed" activities consist of restaurants, cafeterias and boarding houses, hotels, food and fuel distributors, apartment and office building maintenance and laundries, linen supply and dry cleaning establishments.

Instead of giving these estimated 5000 establishments a blanket coverage under WMC regulations, which are "freezing" their workers, individual firms will have to prove in questionnaires that they are meeting WMC regulations in regard to minimum wages, employment of minority groups, and other conditions. The deadline originally was set for January 31.

National Committee Calls On Roosevelt to Run Again

resolutions chairman. It concluded:

"We, assembled here, realizing his world leadership and knowing that our Allies are praying with us for the continuation of his services both in war and peace, do now earnestly solicit him to continue as the great world humanitarian leader."

The resolution, significance of which was not immediately grasped by the members, evoked only spasmodic applause. But earlier in the meeting there had been a real fourth-term demonstration when James P. Aylward of Missouri placed Hannegan's name in nomination.

Members clapped and cheered lustily when Alyward told the meeting Hannegan's "active' aggressive and progressive" qualities would lead the party "to a grand and glorious victory in the election of Franklin Delano Roosevelt to a fourth term."

In a brief speech, the former St. Louis Democratic city chairman told the committee he was only a bush-leaguer from the Ozarks and was a little frightened by his debut in big league national politics.

"I am just a plain, ordinary, everyday, 100 per cent, straight organization Democrat, and I'm not angry with any Democrats," Hannegan said he wanted to make plain. "And I intend to devote all of my time to the work of the Democratic organization."

Aylward, in nominating him, had predicted the young Missourian would equal "Big Jim" Farley, former national committee chairman, "in energy and activity," but Hannegan told committeemen: "I don't think we'll ever have another Jim Farley."

Many Overtures Made

Farley, who broke with the Administration in 1940, following a third-term tiff with the President, had turned down an invitation to attend last night's Jackson Day dinner.

Yesterday's meeting was replete with many an overture to the popular former chairman to take part in the coming campaign.

Former Gov. E. D. Rivers of Georgia had made a speech predicting the Democrats could surely win with Roosevelt but could win as well with another candidate if he had the joint backing of Roosevelt and Farley.

Following the Rivers speech, Hannegan told the committee he was going to make every effort to persuade Farley to participate in the coming campaign.

But Hannegan stressed that the first party leaders he would consult in "getting acquainted' were retiring Chairman Walker and Edward J. Flynn, his predecessor.

"We must have organization and teamwork," he said. "I am confident that if we have the organization, we will have the teamwork, and can look forward to a great victory in November."

Later the new chairman told newsmen he would see Farley on his next trip to New York: "I always do."

The meeting was carefully staged to avoid any factional rifts, but one threatened when Governor Rivers moved that the committee "recommend" restoration of the old two-thirds majority convention vote for nomination of President and Vice President. Senator Green took the floor against the motion as "undemocratic" and contrary to the wishes of the President. The motion was tabled.

Soldier Vote Indorsed

High up on the list of resolutions adopted was one indorsing a Federal war ballot for servicemen, but leaving the decision on validation of soldiers' votes with State election officials. The resolution, vociferously applauded by the committee, actually described the new Green-Lucas soldier vote bill, now pending in the Senate. Most Republicans in Congress have opposed the Federal ballot principle, preferring the pending House measure, leaving service voting to the States.

Another resolution approved a delegate apportionment providing for 1176 votes in the next Democratic convention.

The so-called "fourth term" resolution led off with a postwar declaration for "a secure peace and the opportunity to work." It praised the record of "our President and Commander in Chief" and deplored "the full hue and cry of partisan attacks upon him and upon the Democratic Party.

The committee's selection of Chicago as the 1944 convention city had been taken for granted ever since Defense Transportation Director Eastman appealed to both parties to choose the centrally located rail center.

Nonetheless, Michigan committeemen, accompanied by a delegation from Detroit, launched a brisk fight in what they termed their "Win the War" city. The decision went to a vote, but Detroit withdrew in the midst of an almost solid Chicago ballot.

Wallace Resurrects New Deal Tag in Jackson Dinner Speech

to succeed the latter as Mr. Roosevelt's running mate in the next election.

Seated between them was Mrs. Roosevelt, who chatted gaily and impartially between courses, and took her bow along with other high party figures when her name was called.

But if there was any contest between Rayburn and Wallace, the assembled guests apparently were not aware of it. They gave the same good, respectable hand to these speakers that they gave to all the rest.

Past Zest Is Missing

But the zest of past Jackson Day dinners was missing, despite the flag-bedecked fixings, despite the playing of State songs, despite the first solvent party treasury in history, and, despite the appearance of the newly elected chairman, tall, black-haired and Irish Robert E. Hannegan of St. Louis.

Retiring National Chairman Frank C. Walker tapped the gong after guests had fed satisfactorily but not sumptuously on grapefruit, soup, seafood and rice croquettes, chicken, lima beans, salad, apple meringue pie, coffee and a little wine. Some of the names were fancied up, but that's what they got for their $100.

Celebrities Introduced

Walker turned the gavel over to George Allen, party secretary, who enlivened the party a bit by introducing head table celebrities. Mrs. Charles W. Tillett, assistant chairman, in a brief speech supplied the woman voters' note, and then it came Wallace's turn.

Packed into Wallace's five minutes was everything the New Deal has stood for and more. In effect, it was a challenge hurled directly at the President as well as at the assembled National and State party leaders, who on the whole, took it calmly.

The New Deal was mentioned by name no fewer than 17 times in the page-and-a-quarter length speech. In defining what the New Deal still stands for Wallace rose to lyrical heights:

"The New Deal is as old as the wants of man. The New Deal is Amos proclaiming the needs of the poor in the land of Israel. The New Deal is New England citizens dumping tea in Boston harbor. The New Deal is Andrew Jackson marching in the 20th century. The New Deal is Abraham Lincoln preaching freedom of the oppressed. The New Deal is the new freedom of Woodrow Wilson fighting the cartels as they try to establish national and international fascism. The New Deal is Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Wallace charged "paid hirelings" were trying to create dissension between fighters on the farm, the factory and the war front, but will fail because the three fronts have the same objectives—"quick victory in war, justice in jobs in peace."

Denying Roosevelt has ever denied the principles of the New Deal—"and he never will," Wallace concluded on a fourth term note: The President, in the future, he said, will "give the New Deal a firmer foundation than it ever had before."

Rayburn likewise declared for a fourth term inferentially: "May we never make the fatal error of thinking that we can win the peace under a leadership of any smaller caliber, or under no leadership at all."

If America is to win the peace, reconvert industry to peacetime pursuits and find jobs for returning veterans and displaced veterans, Rayburn said the country will need the same leadership "that brought this Nation out of its disarmed state."

He enumerated the things he said the Democratic Party "is not going to do." It was not, he said, going to forget servicemen and their families, leave postwar jobs to "boom and slump economy," upset free enterprise in its broad meaning of "equal opportunity," or turn back to "the sorry mirage of isolationism."

"Our political closet is not crammed with the skeletons of isolation and our house is not haunted by some other ghosts," he said.

Inferentially Hits Willkie

At one point Rayburn seemed to go out of his way to heave a brick at a leading Republican, presumably Wendell Willkie. "We will not," he said, "palm off on the American people an imitation liberal who points a finger at Wall Street but points a gun at the Securities and Exchange Commission. We are not shopping around for symbols, whether they are Main street of Wall street.

"In the difficult times ahead of us, when nation must meet nation for the common good, when our Government faces international transactions of great moment and when the peace of our people hangs in the balance, I do not believe the American people will entrust the presidency of the United States to one who has no proved ability in the field of foreign policy."

He said the Democratic Party promised no miracles but: "We shall not be chained by fear. Under proper leadership we can create an unequalled period of prosperity and happiness."

Facts about DIAMONDS
by
Arthur J. Sundlun

A diamond is a diamond, but even this superlative gem has shades of quality, size, lustre which the buyer should consider. The advice of a reputable jeweler is essential.

PERFECT stones of fair color are most desirable. A good stone is unvaryingly brilliant at all distances. It should not be less light in the center.

THE over thick stone will look "vacant" in the center and the too thin stone will have a brilliant ring around a dark center.

Uninstructed Delegates Due To Control GOP Convention

By D. Harold Oliver
Associated Press Staff Writer

Present indications are that a big majority of the 1059 delegates who will make up the Republican National Convention starting June 26 at Chicago will be uninstructed as to a presidential nominee.

Which means that history will repeat and anything can happen.

It did in 1940.

Out of 1000 delegates at the 1940 GOP convention in Philadelphia, 365 were pledged or halfway bound to candidates for the nomination. That left 635, or almost two-thirds, free to jump on anybody's bandwagon. That was just what happened.

Out of the 365 pledged delegates, not one was instructed for Wendell Willkie. Yet Willkie won the nomination.

All of which indicates that instructing delegates in advance means nothing unless a candidate can roll up a majority of pledges before the convention meets.

Eight States already have indicated they would send uninstructed delegations to the Republican convention. Many others will follow suit as the State primaries and conventions get under way in February and March. Kentucky is considering holding the first convention February 10, with New Mexico Republicans meeting February 12.

Four years ago, 37 States sent uninstructed delegations to the GOP meeting.

This practice has been frowned on by various party leaders on the ground that it turns the convention into a horse-trading affair, creates deadlocks and results in dark-horse choices who may turn out to be weak Presidents.

The system of selecting convention delegates is a complicated one. Three methods are used, with the voters themselves having very little direct voice in the matter.

Alimony Paid In Pennies Packed In Molasses

Tulsa, Okla., Jan. 22 (AP).—Frank Mosley admitted in court today that he packed 1000 pennies in a bucket of molasses to make up a weekly $10 alimony payment to his former wife.

"For 40 bucks a month I ought to have some fun," he laughed.

Judge Oras S. Shaw laughed, too. "I'm sure you had lots of fun fixing this bucket up," he said. "Now you can have the fun of taking them out."

WFA Clamps Restrictions On Wages of Farm Workers

group" for which wage and hour laws did not apply. During the war they have been in a position to bargain. They have been generally exempt from the draft, sought by war plants and free to move from farm to farm for higher pay.

The unprecedented action by WFA is taken under a directive from the Office of Economic Stabilization, which last month transferred its jurisdiction in the matter to the War Food Administrator.

The farm wage boards are being instructed to set ceilings only for specific types of work or farm operations for certain designated areas. Rates for several types of work were established by OES last year, usually as part of its food-pricing activities, and wage rates have been worked out for imported workers—but no over-all program has previously been attempted.

Dairy farmers have probably been the hardest hit by wage increase demands, operators contending they were unable to get good hands for $200 a month.

The WFA regulation prohibits reductions in wage rates below the highest wage or salary paid for the particular work between January and September, 1942, and increases for rates considered substandard generally will still be permitted, WFA officials said.

After the ceilings are worked out, they said, increases can be granted only by appeal. If a specific type of work is not covered by a ceiling, however, increases up to $2400 can be granted without consent of the wage board.

Salaries for farm workers—generally managers and operators—making between $2400 and $5000 annually can be granted only with approval from the food administrator, except in cases of increases above $5000, where control rests with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Severe penalties were set in the wage regulation, with both employers and employes liable to a maximum fine of $1000 and imprisonment for a year for violations.

Small Nations Feel Menace in 'Big Four' Discord

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—Small nations of the world are recognizing that any promotion of discord among the four great powers, the United States, Britain, Russia and China, is "a menace to every small state," Dr. C. J. Hambro, president of the Norwegian Parliament, said today.

In a speech prepared for delivery during the eighth Metropolitan Opera victory rally broadcast over the Blue Network, Hambro said that without the closest cooperation among the big powers "the world would be led once more toward a maze of international intrigue which would threaten the continued individual life of every little nation."

Scofield Rites Scheduled Tomorrow

Funeral services for John Cowles Scofield, 83, retired chief clerk of the War Department, who died Friday, will be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow at his residence, 1736 Columbia rd. nw. The Rev. Dr. John C. Palmer, pastor of the Columbia Heights Presbyterian Church, will officiate. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Mr. Scofield was appointed clerk in the surgeon general's office in 1884 and by 1899 was chief clerk of the War Department, a position held during 46 years of continuous service under 16 different Secretaries of War. He was retired in 1930.

A native of Pittsford, Vt., he was graduated from Middlebury College, Vt., in 1880. Later he attended the medical department of Jefferson College, Philadelphia, and the law school of George Washington University.

Mr. Scofield had served as a director of the Perpetual Building Association since 1915 and was a member of the Chi Psi Fraternity and the All Souls' Unitarian Church.

Surviving are a son, Col. Frank C. Scofield, who is on duty here in the transportation department of the War Department; two daughters, Mrs. Margaret S. Cline of Washington and Mrs. Clara S. Corcoran of Summit, N. J. His wife, Mrs. Florence Clark Scofield, died in 1917.

Mrs. Anna E. Ditter

Philadelphia, Jan. 22 (AP).—Mrs. Anna Elizabeth Ditter, 90, died at her home here last night unaware that her son, the late Representative J. William Ditter (Republican) of Pennsylvania had been killed in a Navy plane crash near Columbia, Pa., two months ago.

Mrs. Ditter suffered a fractured hip last June. Her condition gradually grew worse, and when her son was killed members of the family decided not to tell her, fearing the shock would be fatal.

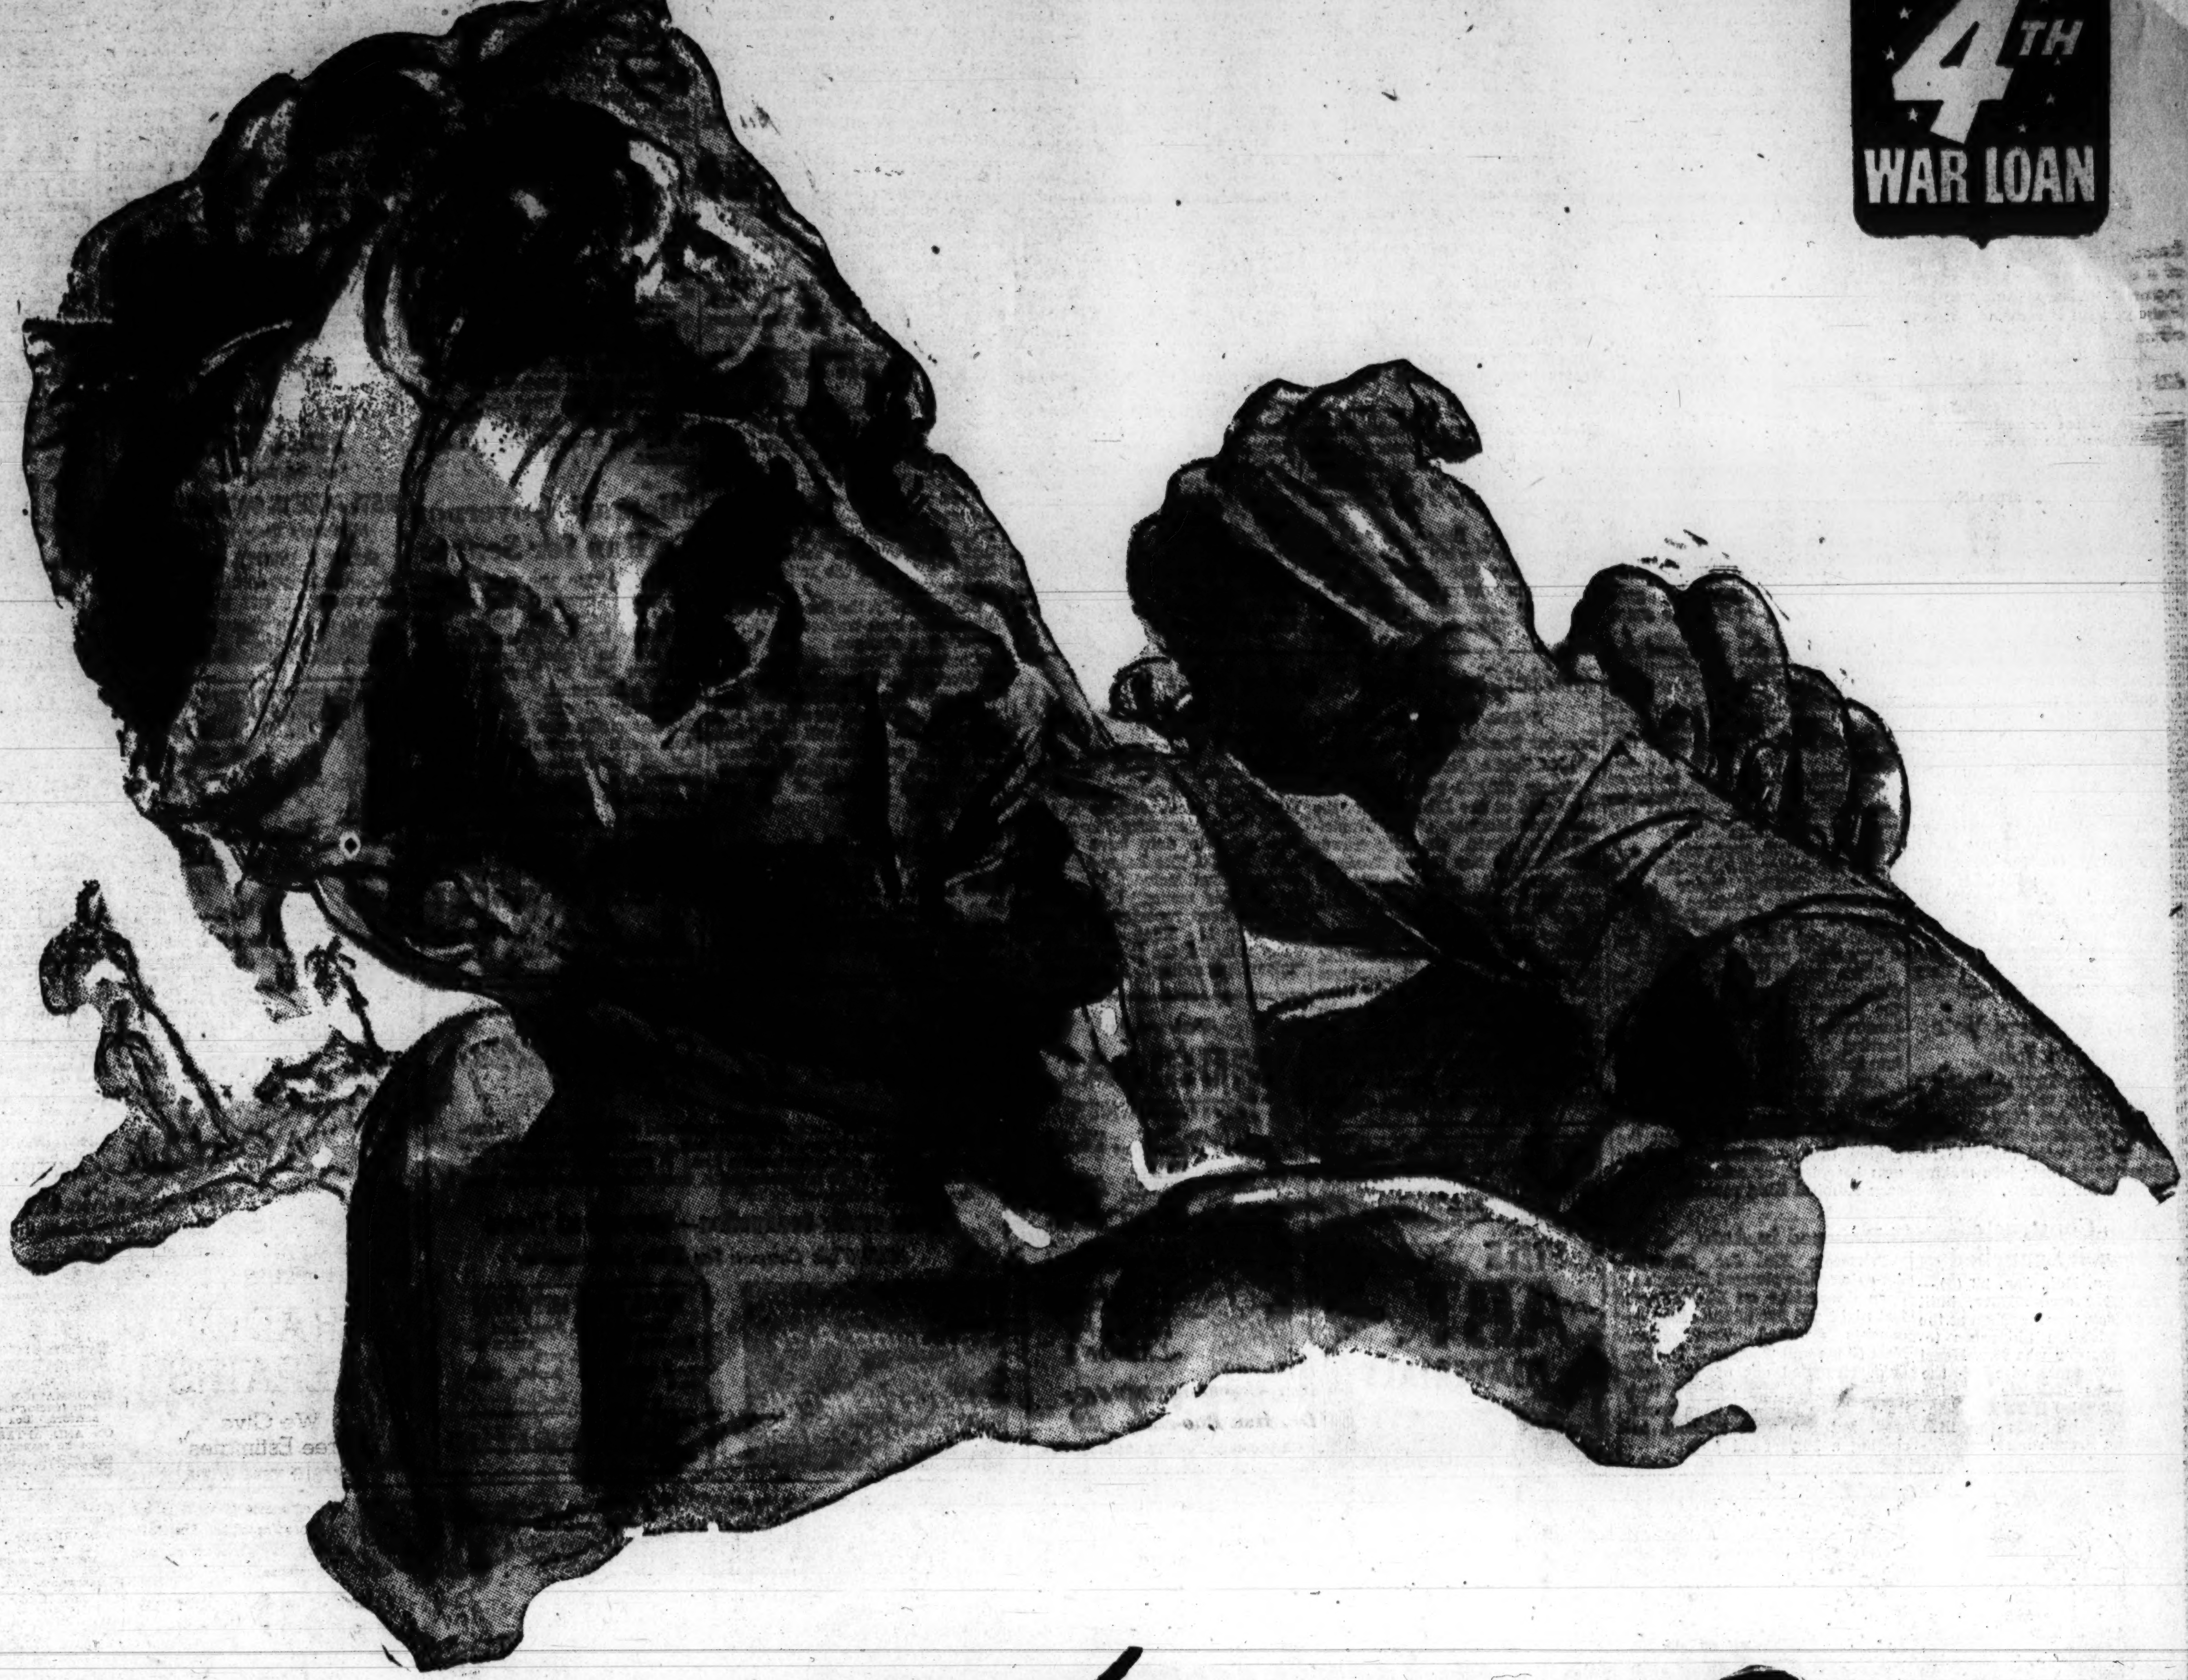
4TH WAR LOAN



Have a tough day, Brother?

Juggling ration points, gas coupons, tax estimates are annoying "headaches," we civilians are taking without complaining! It really does make our day tough. But multiply our headaches a thousand fold and we're still not matching the boys digging in on a beach-head, putting out a machine-gun nest, piloting a landing barge. We can't "make it even" by self-inflicting their hunger, discomforts, and other hardships! Our boys don't ask that. They only want backing in equipment and ammunition. They'll do the fighting if we'll do the financing. That's fair enough! How about you, brother? Let's all—BACK THE ATTACK with those extra War Loan Bonds . . . Today!

Two Federal Agencies Near 4th Loan Goal

Typical of Federal agencies' all-out policy toward the Fourth War Loan drive are the campaigns of two branches, the Department of Agriculture and the Office of Censorship, both already well on the way to reaching their quotas.

In Agriculture, scattered divisions are far over the top and many others are expected to exceed their assigned goals before the first official department report is made, T. Roy Reid of the Agriculture bond committee said yesterday.

Aiding Secretary Wickard and Reid, director of personnel, in the campagin are Henry Shepherd and a special advisory committee composed of Paul Preston, AAA; Fred Hughes, Food Distribution Administration; Dr. E. Y. Winters, Agricultural Research Administration; John Fickling, Soil Conservation Service, and Ralph Rogers, Bureau of Agricultural Economics. This board works with the department's network of "minute men" in contacting each employe.

At Censorship, Warren S. Dean heads a committee that yesterday reported 49 per cent of the office's $765,000 quota already achieved, without including February payroll deductions as is the policy in many Federal agencies. Inclusion of these amounts, Dean pointed out, would boost the figure to 90 per cent, but the committee prefers to add such sums only as they are paid.

Currently aiming for 200 per cent of their goal, the war bond committee is pressing sales at all of its branch stations from San Juan, Porto Rico, to Honolulu.

Working with Dean are Herbert Mendelson, directing coordination and statistics and Henry Deel, issuing agent for the Treasury. Chairmen for each division are: Fred Kerby, F. C. Clough, E. H. Bronson, Mrs. Elizabeth Geib, Mrs. Doris Jones, Mrs. Elizabeth Duffy, Mrs. Dorothy Anderson, Vivian Stocks, George See, Mrs. Mary Woolfley and Arlene Haugen.

Aircraft Workers Vote To Return to Jobs

Warship Constructed For French Launched

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 22 (AP).—The destroyer escort Hova, built for the French, was launched at the Dravo Corporation Shipyards today. The sponsor was Mrs. Henri Etienne Hoppenot, wife of the United States delegate of the French National Liberation Committee. The ship was the fifth built for the French here.

Cargo Ship's Engines Prove Fascinating

By Anne Hagner

Two small engines on the Merchant Marine ship American Mariner, docked at Municipal wharf in connection with the Fourth War Loan drive, can generate enough power to provide electricity for all of Washington's street lights.

And those same 300-kilowatt generators, which today are given an hourly check by one man, in the early days of shipping would have required 25 or 30 men stoking by hand—all this, and much more, can be learned by inquisitive visitors to the ship, open daily from 2:30 to 5 and 7:30 to 10 p. m.

Warrant Officer Albert White of Norfolk, Va., who at 24 has seen eight years' service at sea, is third assistant engineer of the big Liberty ship and can supply figures that make the prospective bond-buyer dig just twice as deep. Get these statistics:

To send the American Mariner from New York to England along present routes, a distance of 4000 miles, is about a 500-hour trip with a convoy traveling at 8 knots, an average speed. Just to supply fuel for this trip—a mere fraction of the total cost of operation—would require 1000 people to buy a $100 war bond each—or is worth $7500 in cold cash.

The vast engine rooms of the Mariner are models of cleanliness and shipshape order. Guests also may see the big tanks which distill salt water to make it suitable for drinking purposes and use in the boilers.

"It may surprise you to know that water for the boilers must be much more free of salt than the water for drinking," White said. "The closer you approach no salt at all, the better it is for the boilers—but distilled water tastes terrifically flat. Drinking water is supposed to have a small salty content—not briny, of course, but a very small percentage of salt."

That expensive fuel oil, he explained, is carried in tanks in the bottom of the ship, which is constructed with a double-bottom leaving a 42-inch space, divided into tanks for oil, fuel and water.

And do most people who question Warrant Officer White want to know about operating the ship? No, they prefer to tell him about the engine they constructed in their own basement, or ask him if he's seen Admiral King recently.

5 Drowned in Auto

Pensacola, Fla., Jan. 22 (AP).—An automobile plunged through an open drawbridge on Little Bayou last night and five of the seven occupants drowned. Two sailors, Neal Stone and Thomas J. Holderfield, struggled out of the submerged car and swam ashore. Bodies of three civilians were recovered, but two were missing, including a 16-year-old girl.

Big Inch Pipeline Oil Deliveries Amount To 70,680,000 Barrels

The "Big Inch" pipeline supplied the East with 70,680,000 barrels of crude oil in its first partial year of operation, Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes reported yesterday.

At its designed rate of 300,000 barrels a day, the big pipe "ought to deliver more than 100 million barrels during the next 12 months," Ickes said.

"This will aid materially," the PAW administrator said, "in keeping the essential East Coast refineries operating and in reducing the amount which must be brought into the East Coast by tank cars, barges and tankers."

Ickes credited the pipeline as being the "biggest single factor" in increasing refinery production in the East.

Oil industry spokesmen in New York City, however, declared yesterday that more tankers are needed to bring crude oil and gasoline East despite the "big inch" and its companion, the "little big-inch" pipeline.

The Associated Press reported New York oil men as being disappointed in the performance of the "big inch," which, they said, had recently slowed to an operating capacity of only 150,000 barrels daily.

The failure, they said, was attributable to the big line's inability to withstand the necessary pressures of maximum operation. The same has been said of the "little big inch," which is expected to fall as much as 15 per cent below rated capacity when it is finally put into operation.

Ickes, in reviewing the status of the entire pipeline program after almost a year of operation, admitted that the PAW's war pipeline program was "by no means the whole answer to the over-all problem of getting oil to all of the places it is needed."

"However," he said, "we would be much more sore-pressed today had not most of these pipeline projects been completed."

The Petroleum Administration for War report showed that 14 of 20 projects authorized 20 months ago had been completed and for the most part in operation at the end of last year and promised that five of the incompleted lines will be finished by spring and the remaining one by summer.

Oil Hearing Sought

By International News Service

A congressional hearing at which secrets of the Government's foreign oil policy would be aired was disclosed yesterday as the objective of Senators E. H. Moore (Republican), Oklahoma, and Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), Maine, who introduced a Senate resolution to dissolve the Petroleum Reserve Corporation.

Vice President Wallace granted Moore's request to send the resolution to the Interstate Commerce Committee, of which Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, is chairman.

$50,000 Sold a Ship

Nearly $50,000 worth of bonds were sold at the Liberty ship, the American Mariner, at the Municipal Fish Wharf. Capacity crowds clamoring to buy forced Treasury officials to call into service WAVES who were visiting the ship to aid in the bond booths aboard.

Sales aboard the U. S. Maritime Service training ships were boosted by District Government employes who visited the ship. They were a vanguard for Commissioner John Russell Young and Assistant Engineer Commissioner Col. J. D. Arthur, jr. The latter had lunch with the ship's captain, Comdr. J. H. Masse, in acknowledgment of the District's donation of berthing privileges.

National bond sales toward the 14-billion-dollar quota were reported at the seventy-eighth-million-dollar level, despite a statement from Secretary Morgenthau that sales to date have reached 1,480,000,000. The latter figures, it was explained included some of the drive's "big money" that was not to have been reported until after February 1. Morgenthau apparently released the total through a "misunderstanding," it was said.

Tax Measure Now Expected To Escape Veto

A presidential veto of the new two billion dollar-plus tax bill may have been averted, it appeared yesterday, by Senate softening of its earlier efforts to place rigid limitations on the laws governing recovery of war profits deemed excessive.

The Senate completed its work on the measure yesterday, two months after House action, and conferees will meet Monday to begin adjustment of differences between the two chambers.

Tax specialists agreed the Treasury had lost approximately 200 million dollars by failure to put in force on January 1 the elaborate list of added and new excises on so-called luxury items and the boosted postal rates. When the House Ways and Means Committee initiated the legislation last summer it set a goal of final enactment for December 20.

It is expected now that the new excises will become effective March 1.

The measure embodies only about one-fifth the $10,500,000,000 requested by the Administration, and speculation of a veto was heard about Capitol Hill when Senate revisions of the war contract renegotiation section brought from a Treasury spokesman a statement that the legislation should be labeled "a law for the relief of war profiteers."

Subsequently, the Senate Finance Committee back-tracked on the renegotiation changes.

Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee, said yesterday, "I think we will get out a bill the President will sign," and he voiced confidence the Senate and House could adjust quickly their varied versions of the two bills.

He denied he meant to inflict wounds on the boy, stating he struck the child's face by accident.

"The boy moved," he said.

Samuel Moorman, grandfather of Joe, jr., declared after the trial that he has raised nine children and five grandchildren—so he is not upset in the least at the prospect of adding another little boy to his big household at the E st. address.

Missouri Governor To Run for Senate

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 22 (AP).—Governor Forrest C. Donnell announced tonight he would be a candidate for Republican nomination for the United States Senate seat now held by Bennett Champ Clark, a Democrat.

Attorney General Roy McKittrick has challenged Clark for the Democratic nomination. Clark himself has made no formal announcement, but political leaders predicted he will seek reelection.

Building of 7 Steel Plants At Cost of 97 Million Halted

By Ben W. Gilbert

Highlighting the comparatively easy materials production picture, the War Production Board last night asked the Defense Plant Corp. to stop work on seven steel plant construction projects scheduled to cost 97 million dollars.

The action followed the previous halting of construction of five other steel plants and the shutting down of seven aluminum pot lines.

Although technically only a recommendation to DFC, it was doubted that the Reconstruction Finance Corp. subsidiary would continue with the projects in the face of WPB's expressed wishes. However, WPB specified that the private companies involved may complete the plants with their own funds if they wish. None of them was finished, although some were near completion, WPB said.

The newly cutback steel plants are located at South Chicago, Ill., Massillon and Canton, Ohio, East Hartford, Conn., and Wilder, Ky. All but the Wilder plant were to have been operated by the Republic Steel Corp., with the Andrews Steel Co. to have operated the Kentucky project.

The cutting back of raw materials facilities which have become surplus as far as the war is concerned has drawn fire from advocates of early resumption of civilian production, but the WPB has emphasized that no large scale effort in that direction will be attempted until invasion beachheads have been established in western Europe and the military situation clears up.

By way of emphasis, Charles E. Wilson, executive vice chairman of WPB, revealed that he informed members of the domestic mechanical refrigerator industry advisory committee that he could not set a date for the resumption of production of domestic refrigerators and similar heavy consumer goods.

"Our Army and Navy face what is probably the most perilous undertaking in military history," he said. "Industry must be kept flexible, so that it will be able to meet the requirements for increased war production that may result from impending military operations.

"Until the outcome of what lies ahead becomes clear—and there is no telling when that will be—production of domestic mechanical refrigerators cannot be resumed.

"Materials are available, but labor cannot be assigned to turn these materials into refrigerators. Labor is already in short supply in many areas and within the next six months many men will be drafted out of industry."

During the day, Wilson's own status with respect to developments was clarified by the White House, which disclosed that President Roosevelt has asked the General Electric Co. to allow him to continue on leave until next summer.

Stating that Wilson's continuance in his present post was "really essential to the conduct of the war," President Roosevelt in a letter to GE President Gerard Swope asked that Wilson's leave be extended "so that he can help to see the Government through this critical period."

Wilson left the presidency of GE to take his present WPB job, and Swope returned from retirement to fill in for him.

It is believed that Wilson will have a major part in making reconversion decisions when the present lid is lifted.

The seven steel plants "cutback" was designed to increase the supply of alloy and high quality carbon steel, the requirements for which have been declining in recent months, WPB said.

The seven plants, together with their location and proportion of estimated cost at completion are listed:

Electric furnace plant, South Chicago, Ill., with a capacity of 900,000 tons of steel annually, 98 per cent complete, to have cost $88,484,860.

Annealing furnaces, South Chicago, more than 50 per cent complete, to have cost $1,044,000.

Three ingot warming pits, Massillon, Ohio, not started, to have cost $67,780.

Facilities for crushing and briquetting 48,000 tons of alloy steel turnings, Canton, Ohio, not started, to have cost $43,000.

Cooling furnaces, Canton, Ohio, 50 per cent complete, to have cost $295,000.

Facilities to increase production of cold-drawn aircraft alloy steel bars and other products by 49,200 tons, East Hartford, Conn., more than 75 per cent complete, to have cost $1,708,000.

Plant to produce alloy semi-finished blooms for gun forgings, Wilder, Ky. (Andrews Steel Co.), practically complete, to have cost $5,133,000.

No more Federal funds will be supplied after DPC orders cancellation, WPB said, but the plants will remain in the hands of the operating companies, with the money already advanced remaining as a debt against the plant.

Asthma Mucus Loosened First Day
For Thousands of Sufferers
Choking, gasping, wheezing, recurring attacks of Bronchial Asthma ruin your sleep and rob your blood of vitally important oxygen because you can't get air in and out of your lungs properly. But now it is no longer necessary to suffer from these terrible attacks without the benefit you may receive from a physician's prescription called Mendaco. Within a very short time after the first dose, Mendaco ingredients start circulating thru the blood, thus reaching the smallest as well as the largest Bronchial tubes where they usually quickly help liquefy, loosen and remove thick strangling mucus (phlegm), thereby promoting freer breathing and more restful sleep. In fact, Mendaco has proved so successful in helping thousands of sufferers from recurring spasms of Bronchial Asthma that it is sold under a guarantee of money back unless completely satisfactory. Stimson Warns

Vote Seen Delaying Army Mail

By Mary Spargo

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson warned yesterday that mail from home for soldiers overseas—"an important morale factor"—will be "seriously curtailed or entirely shut off for a considerable period "if the soldier vote bill is complicated by State ballots.

Stimson's comment, made in a letter to Chairman Worley (Democrat) of Texas, of the House Elections Committee, came as both houses of Congress prepared for a final showdown on the question of a Federal ballot for servicemen and servicewomen.

The Secretary's statement was the first official War Department comment on the Rankin States rights soldier vote bill slated for House consideration this week. The letter was consistent, however, with the department's previously expressed position that the Army cannot comply with the requirements of 48 States in handling soldier ballots.

Compromise Is Sought

On the Senate side, sponsors of the Federal ballot will attempt to push through the compromise Green-Lucas bill before the House completes action on the Rankin measure. Under the Green-Lucas compromise measure, the War and Navy Departments will distribute blank ballots to be returned to a War Ballot Commission which will distribute them to the secretaries of the 48 States.

This compromise would keep determination of eligible voters in the hands of State officials. It is intended to allay criticism of the constitutionality of the Federal ballot, and quiet the fears of some Southern Democrats that political control might be wrested from State hands.

Stimson warned Worley, whose compromise Federal war ballot bill was defeated, 7 to 5, in his own committee, in favor of the Rankin measure, that at present "there is not sufficient plane space to carry all letters to and from home."

Pressure of Soldier Mail

"As more men go overseas the volume of home correspondence will increase," Stimson asserted.

Singling out provisions in the bill requiring priority to be given soldier voting material, Stimson said it would be hard enough to transport the lightweight, small-sized Federal ballots to be carried by air in bulk.

"But it is a very different matter to require this priority as to many individual mailings of bulky state balloting material over several weeks or months," Stimson added.

"And as this provision is applicable to the State primaries, instead of merely to the general elections, such priority carriage would thus additionally extend from February to October (when the last State primary is held.)

"It would be the judgment of the military authorities that to give such priority over official and unofficial communications would interfere with the effective prosecution of the war."

Stimson closed his letter with the statement that the "uninterrupted receipt of home mail by soldiers overseas is of the utmost importance."

Wadsworth to Voice Plea For National Service Act

Representative James W. Wadsworth (Republican) of New York, will indorse the President's recommendation of a national service act when he is interviewed today at 2:15 p. m., over Station WMAL, by Barnet Nover, Washington Post columnist.

In a prebroadcast statement Wadsworth said that he had long been convinced that such an act "representing a full measure of devotion," would hasten our victory and in doing so save lives.

He said that he was not surprised at the President's recommendation "for it is a fact that this matter has been uppermost in his mind for many months."

Sees "Good Chance" For It

Commenting on the chance of passage of such a bill, Wadsworth said:

"I believe this legislation has a good chance of passage. The road ahead of our country is going to be fearfully rough and we shall have to make more and more sacrifices. The people themselves will understand this and demand of their representatives in the Congress that the law state specifically the obligation upon us all to serve."

Asked his opinion of recent charges of labor leaders that the President's proposal was a "quack remedy" and would impose "involuntary servitude," Wadsworth replied:

"Such a law cannot be denounced as a quack remedy. One of our troubles today is that we have tried too many quack remedies—remedies without sanction of law, remedies consisting of threats, pressures exhortations, inducements. They have not worked."

He said there was a growing feeling that in wartime all Americans should be treated alike under the law and that this being the case the law should say so.

Working for Country

He said it was not involuntary servitude that when a workman is assigned to a factory he is not working for the profit of his employer but is working for his country, just as much so as a drafted soldier.

Told that one of the main objections to the law is the belief that the Nation, in the near future, will not be troubled by labor shortages, Wadsworth replied:

"The plain fact is that we need more workers rather than less and we must have them better distributed . . . to say that the war is not going to consume more of of our goods in the months to come than in the months just passed is to fail utterly to understand that this war is getting bigger and bigger and will consume more and more."

Mystery Deepens

Slain Woman Fought Killer Desperately

Chicago, Jan. 22 (AP).—The mystery of the hotel room slaying of Mrs. Frank Starr Williams, wife of a Washington diplomat, deepened tonight after a police official said there was evidence the victim "struggled desperately" for her life.

Police Capt. Frank Reynolds said Mrs. Williams may have struggled with the killer, believed to have been a well dressed, middle-aged woman. He said there were deep powder burns on Mrs. Williams' head, chest and between the thumb and finger of her left hand and an abrasion on her hand.

An examination of two hotel safety deposit boxes Mrs. Williams rented last Wednesday, the day she was shot, showed her $30,000 in jewels intact and Coroner A. L. Brodie said "I don't believe that robbery was the motive for the shooting."

With the robbery motive discounted, police apparently were back where they started in their search for clews to the identity of the woman who, they were told, fatally wounded Mrs. Williams and fired at her daughter, Mrs. Patricia Goodbody, in Mrs. Williams' Drake Hotel room Wednesday night.

Funeral services for Mrs. Williams were held this afternoon at Graceland Cemetery Chapel, across the city from the previously designated chapel and a half hour ahead of schedule.

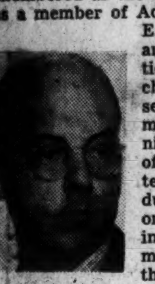
Maj. Siple, Ex-Boy Scout War Test Service Chief

QUARTERMASTER PERSONALITIES: Maj. Paul Siple will be remembered as the Boy Scout who was a member of Admiral Richard E. Byrd's Antarctic expeditions. Now he's chief of the test section in the military planning branch. His office makes tests and conducts research on food, clothing and equipment as well as the men who use them in all sorts of climate, from 90 below zero to tropical conditions. A strict military disciplinarian would get a shock if he walked unexpectedly into the major's office. He might see an officer in shorts, another wearing different shoes, someone else in an overcoat. You see, employes in the office test clothing themselves before the quartermaster general orders it for soldiers. In the office are maps on which the planners can determine almost exactly the climatic conditions at any spot on the globe, land or sea. This is a guide in equipping soldiers who may have to fight there. A consultant in the office is Sir Hubert Wilkins, famed explorer.



Arthur E. DuBois has one of the most unique jobs in the Government, or the world for that matter. He is chief and founder of the heraldic section and he's recognized as the Nation's No. 1 heraldic expert. All Army insignia is designed and approved in his office. That means all flags, service ribbons, decorations, and the like. He helped to design the Purple Heart, Air Medal, Distinguished Flying Cross, among others. The colors and designs must not conflict with those of States or other nations. It takes long hours of research before any design and colors can be used. Most everyone has seen the pre-Pearl Harbor service ribbon with the yellow background. Well, DuBois says the yellow gold represents the golden opportunity of youth to serve his country's colors, represented by the lines of red, white and blue.

DuBois gets all kinds of questions fired at him, but the most unusual was: "What is the sex of our national bird?" He had to search a long time but he finally came up with proof that our national eagle is a male. He discovered a description of the eagle in the archives. DuBois has been with QMC for the past 25 years. He began as an engineer draftsman. Soon he started to work on designs and insignias and he was eventually made chief of the heraldic section when it was formed. He likes his work and his hobby. They're both work on heraldry.

Mrs. Milton Erlanger of New York is consultant on war dogs to Maj. Gen. E. B. Gregory, the QMC. In 1942, she organized "Dogs for Defense," an organization that receives animals from patriotic citizens, gives them obedience training and then turns them over to the quartermaster for assignments such as sentries, patrol and guard work. There are now 8000 dogs in uniform and some of them have been decorated for bravery and outstanding work. Most every dog replaces at least one man in uniform for combat duty. Mrs. Erlanger tried to get a war dog organization set up during World War I along the same line as carrier pigeon units in the Signal Corps, but more than 20 years passed before her dream came true.

Miss Mary I. Barber is responsible for what the soldier has to eat. She makes up the master menus which are used as guides in all Army camps and establishments. Miss Barber sees to it that the soldiers get vitamin-packed meals that are balanced, nutritionally speaking. Mess sergeants can switch foods but they are advised not to upset the calorie balance. A check of camp menus show that the vast majority follow Miss Barber's advice. And the soldiers are doing well, thank you. Most of them gain weight, even the WAC's The favorite dish is steak and potatoes and the men drink more milk than was anticipated. Fewer fresh vegetables are eaten.

All those Army uniforms one sees just didn't happen. There are scores of them and behind them all, the man who put them down on paper and worked out the design is Israel L. Freedman. The design expert was drafted from private industry three years ago and since that time he has designed the officers' summer uniform; WAC uniforms, hostesses' and librarians' uniforms, field jackets, long field overcoats, several types of parkas among others. It sometimes takes months before a new uniform can be manufactured in volume. First, climatic conditions, terrain and all other factors must be considered and the kind of fabric agreed on. Then Freedman goes to work on the design. Samples are then made and given laboratory tests. Passed the test it goes to the Quartermaster Technical Committee for approval before it is standardized by Army Service Forces and made in volume . . . Federal Diary of the Air, today at 4:35, WRC.

N.Y. Grand Jury Hits Laborers' Union Actions

Hitting at conditions strikingly similar to those charged by rank and file members of the Washington local of the Building Laborers' Union, a runaway grand jury in New York filed a report yesterday denouncing racketeering within two other locals of the union and asking for antiracketeering laws to protect union members from exploitation by their officials.

The special grand jury here investigating the Larry-Kelly-Building Union case is to meet again Wednesday, when, according to U. S. Attorney John W. Fihelly, high officials of the powerful mother union, the International Hod Carriers, Building and Common Laborers, composed of 450,000 members, will be questioned to determine whether any of them were connected with the estimated embezzlement here of $150,000.

The New York grand jury served since December 1 on its own initiative without a prosecutor and without any compensation.

D. C. Ramifications in Case

Ramifications of cases both here and in New York are identical.

In up-State New York, Locals 17 and 60, working in six counties, were involved. There, the grand jury said, "czars" were in control and members of the union were powerless to stop their activities.

Two officials of the New York locals are now jailed for embezzlements of part of more than $260,000, which has never been accounted for. They are Sam Nuzzo and Jack Wallace. James Bove, vice president of the international, has been indicted on charges of extorting more than $700,000 there.

Larry Kelly, onetime boss of the Washington local, is now a fugitive from the grand jury, which is seeking him for questioning.

Similarities in the allegations here and in New York are:

"The Daily Record of the operations of this union was a story of extravagence, waste and theft," said the New York body. Fihelly here has echoed this statement many times.

"Satellites of the union boss (Nuzzo) were treated to trips to conventions with all expenses paid without accounting." Fihelly has found here that Kelly and two of his satellites obtained $1000 each to go to Toronto for a convention, and that furthermore they used union funds to buy whisky and build their own homes.

"At least $260,000 was spent, squandered or stolen without accounting, without vouchers and usually without any itemization of the expenditures." Keeping the membership ignorant of what happened to its money is stated by Fihelly to have occurred here.

"The grand jury (of New York) examined partial records of Local 60 of the Hodcarriers Union which flourished under the same condition as Local 17." Here the grand jury is probing activities of Kelly and his associates at defense camps at Quantico, Va., and Camp Springs and Cedar Point, Md. Fihelly said it appeared from a check of the records that wholesale embezzlements occurred in those places.

In Quantico Bank Account

For example, says Fihelly, Kelly kept the whole treasury of the Quantico local in his own bank account and furthermore appointed his wife as an officer of the union. In La Plata, Kelly ran two night spots for workers where gambling and other associated activities existed, Fihelly said.

The New York grand jury advised legislation so that laborers could join unions without discrimination; examine union records at all reasonable times; require regular detailed financial reports; fix salaries of all officers and employes of their unions; set up proper audit systems; require that expulsion of members be permitted only with majority approval; fix the amount of dues they pay, and nominate and elect officers by secret ballot and without coercion.

"At present," said the New York grand jury, "labor union members who are victims of illegal or arbitrary conduct within their unions are virtually without redress. They may complain to the international union involved. Our experience has been that in some unions such complaints are a mere waste of time."

City News in Brief

Trip to Paper Mill Will Reward Top Collectors in Salvage Drive

Several hundred more pounds of reclaimed waste paper solicited and collected by Washington area Boy Scouts were turned in yesterday as salvage for the war effort and as credit toward an expense-paid trip to a paper mill, offered as an incentive award in the program by The Washington Post.

Officials of the D. C. Salvage Committee, which is sponsoring the paper salvage drive in cooperation with The Post, tomorrow will begin tabulating the returns of the campaign's third official collection. Only two more collections will be made this month, and winners of the paper mill tour will be determined on the basis of total collections for January.

Only troops registered in the drive whose paper collections have been picked up by D. C. Salvage Committee trucks, will be eligible, since figures filed by the committee will be used to decide the five troops making the heaviest paper collections this month. The top-collecting troops will be selected January 31, and they, in turn, will select a scout or cub to represent them on The Post-sponsored tour.

Grocer Shoots Man

Maybe lightning doesn't, but thieves sometimes strike twice in the same spot, and John Sesso, 55, owner of a grocery store at 1410 9th st. nw., was ready with a revolver the second time.

After he was robbed of $275 a week ago, Sesso decided to arm himself against a similar incident. Yesterday morning, he told police, he was again held up by the same thief, who said, "This is a stickup. You put the police on me."

Sesso told the police he shot the youth twice in the chest before the would-be robber grabbed the revolver, later recovered in a nearby alley, and ran.

He later applied for treatment for the wounds at Freedman's Hospital, where he is said to be in serious condition.

Police meanwhile charged the man, identified as Robert Lee Freedman, 21, of 1415 Columbia rd. nw., with attempted robbery.

Rescue Hero Kills Self

Arthur S. Parker, who was awarded the Carnegie Medal for rescuing a would-be suicide four years ago, took his own life yesterday in his home at 1206 10th st. nw.

A certificate of suicide was issued by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald after Parker, 49, was pronounced dead by an Emergency Hospital physician. He had been found lying in the bathtub of his apartment, his forearms slashed by a razor which was discovered under his body.

An employe of the Commodity Credit Corporation of the Department of Agriculture, Parker was awarded the Carnegie Medal for saving the life of a woman who had jumped from the Highway Bridge into the Potomac.

Officers Installed

Grand Monarch Robert R. Penna and other officers of Mithras Sanctorium, No. 100, "Playground of Odd Fellows," were installed at Kidder Hall Friday evening, it was announced yesterday. Deputy Supreme Monarchos Charles H. Knapp of Baltimore officiated at the ceremony.

Fatal Home Accidents

Home accidents have caused twice as many deaths as traffic thus far this year, a survey released yesterday by the District Chapter of the Red Cross Home Accident Service pointed out.

During the week of January 15 to 21, home accidents resulted in the death of one person, after a fall, hospitalization for 65 others and treatment for an additional 34. The death last week brought to 10 the number of home accident fatalities since the first of the year. Five resulted from falls, three from burns and two from suffocation.

District hospitals, the survey stated, reported 25 persons hospitalized as a result of burns, 10 from falls, 25 from severe cuts, 3 from accidental poisoning, 1 from accidental discharge of firearms and 1 from a severe eye injury.

Judge's House Burned

Judge Brice Clagett was hearing a vagrancy case yesterday in Municipal Court when the phone rang and a voice exclaimed, "Say, judge, your tenant house at Landover, Md., is on fire."

The judge delayed the case and called the Bladensburg Fire Department.

He then found Robert Ward, 24, Negro, guilty of vagrancy and gave him five days in jail.

It was learned later that by the time the firemen got to the tenant house, neighbors had extinguished the flames. Damage was small.

Identity Bureau Head

Detective Lieut. Herbert G. Wanamaker, chief of the robbery squad, yesterday was placed in charge of the police Identification Bureau in a move described by officials as one "designed to make the bureau one of the best in the country."

WANAMAKER STRANGE

At the same time, Detective Chief Robert J. Barrett said his assistant, Capt. Clyde N. Strange, would take command of the robbery squad to be assisted by Detective Sergt. Richard F. McCarty.

Private Lewis E. Hazard, acting chief of the Identification Bureau since the retirement last month of Detective Sergt. Viggo Larsen, was named as Wanamaker's assistant.

Freedmen's New Head

Dr. James Lowell Hall, head of the department of medicine of Howard University, yesterday was sworn in as superintendent of Freedmen's Hospital to succeed Dr. John W. Lawlah, dean of Howard's Medical School.

The appointment was announced by the Federal Security Agency.

Dr. Hall was graduated from Rush Medical College in 1926 and after four years of private practice took a year of postgraduate work at the University of Vienna. At the latter school he concentrated on internal medicine and pathology.

Delinquency Discussed

Five hundred Negro boys and girls of the Southwest section discussed the problems of child delinquency and a 16-year-old spokesman for the group made a plea for "more settlement house facilities and less congested homes" yesterday afternoon at Bell School, Second and D sts. sw.

Lois Smith, a Dunbar High School pupil who gave youth's viewpoint toward the problem at the meeting sponsored by the Southwest Community House, declared:

"We, too, observe what goes on around us and are interested in finding out what we can do. We need a larger settlement house. We need better homes free of congestion. Give us a chance to serve. This is our responsibility, too."

Greeks Ask Clothing

Used clothing for the suffering people of Greece was appealed for yesterday by Mme. Philon Al. Philon, wife of the counselor of the Greek Embassy, in connection with a drive currently sponsored by the Greek War Relief Association.

Clothing is being received for packing and shipment at headquarters of a special committee appointed for the drive, 3937 Georgia ave. nw., Randolph 6065. The receiving center is open between 11 a. m. and 5 p. m. daily, except Sundays, and from 7 to 10 p. m. on Mondays and Wednesdays.

Ambulance Delay Probe

Investigation into the reported delay of the ambulance stationed at Gallinger Hospital in reporting to the scene of an accident on Friday night was promised yesterday by Thomas G. Jones, assistant to H. A. Friede, chief of fire alarm headquarters.

Fire alarm headquarters maintains an ambulance dispatching center, known as the emergency ambulance service. It was this center which dispatched the ambulance to the accident.

According to records available yesterday, the ambulance was dispatched from Gallinger at 7:05, arrived in the 3800 block of Nichols ave. se. at 7:30 and then took the victim to Gallinger, where she died at 10:50 p. m. The victim was Marjorie Nicholson, 22, of 235 Mississippi ave. se. She was struck by a truck as she stepped from a bus.

Army Defends Pentagon Cost; To Pay Its Way

The War Department yesterday issued a detailed defense of the cost of the Pentagon Building, predicting the gigantic structure will pay for itself in 8 to 14 years "on the basis of what the Government would have had to pay to rent an equivalent amount of Washington office space—if it had been available."

The Pentagon has cost $63,645,954, the department said, adding that this figure does not include $4,239,550 spent for special equipment such as the printing and reproduction plant, the Signal Corps message center and laboratories nor does it include $6,326,000 spent by the Public Roads Administration "for completion of vital links in the National Highway plan." It said $667,780 of the appropriations is being returned.

Necessary Installations

The printing plant, message center and laboratories, the Army said, would have had to have been installed anyway and the roadways were planned as early as 1934 "to open the long-congested southern approaches to Washington."

The department said building enough temporary structures to house the operations now centered in the Pentagon would have cost $28,720,000 for the buildings alone. "A vast 'tempo' project capable of housing 30,000 to 40,000 workers and their multitudinous activities would sprawl over an estimated square mile," and would need roads and utilities costing millions more.

Project Was Rushed

"The cost of building the 320-acre Pentagon and its necessary facilities compares favorably with the costs of other Government buildings," the Army said. "The Pentagon cost $17.07 per 'net' square foot—that is, per square foot of usable office space. With costs adjusted to take into consideration the lower index of construction prices prevailing during those years, Government buildings erected in Washington between 1932 and 1940 cost between $16.79 and $31.92 per net square foot. . . . The Pentagon, moreover was marked 'Urgent'. It was rushed to completion 15 months ahead of schedule."

The department said rentals for 30 of the largest Government-leased or partly leased commercial office buildings here, housing 22,470 workers, average $1.18 per square foot but that rentals for the more modern space approximate $2 per square foot. At the $1,18 figure, it said, the Pentagon's 3,634,490 square feet would cost $4,288,698 annually.

Main building only, construction	$49,736,654
Outside utilities, including:
Boiler and refrigeration plant	4,123,217
Water service outside bldg.	200,000
Sewage system	500,000
Roads, parking areas, outside drainage	6,301,060
Landscaping	385,003
Outside electric service	800,000
Architect-engineer costs	1,600,000

Schiaparelli To Participate In D.C. 'Clinic'

Government girls turned models—with the additional attraction of Elsa Schiaparelli, world-famed clothes designer; Harry Conover, head of the New York "cover girl" agency; Author David Cohn and others—will share the spotlight at Wartime Educational Clinic at 8 p. m. Tuesday and Wednesday in the Interior Department auditorium.

Sponsored by the Government Girl Club and presented by The Washington Post, the clinic will tell an audience of Federal employes scores of short cuts guaranteed to show how to spend less money more wisely.

Furthermore Dr. Naomi Kanof, local dermatologist, will give hints on skin care, and Craig McGeachy, first secretary of the British Embassy, will describe the reactions of British women toward the war. Representative Winifred Stanley of New York will talk about careers—and 1000 Government girls each night will crowd into the auditorium to learn the know-how of smart dressing on little cash.

Personnel heads and employe counselors in Federal agencies report that tickets almost have disappeared, but that a few still are available in certain departments. No charge is made for admission; tickets are distributed on a first-come, first-served basis.

Army Board Ends WAC Officer Case; Decision Awaited

Hearings by a special Army reclassification board into unfitness charges against WAC First Lieut. Virginia Wight ended yesterday and a decision is expected shortly.

James J. Laughlin, civilian attorney for Lieutenant Wight, said the decision of the board will be reviewed and will be final in two weeks.

The hearings were held inside Pentagon Building conference rooms guarded by Military Police with revolvers. The Army has kept all testimony a secret.

Charges against her include insubordination, fraternizing with enlisted personnel, refusing to obey orders asking for financial statements and wearing slacks and sweaters.

Laughlin praised "the fairness of the board."

Girl, 14, Reported Missing

Betty Sedgwick, 14, of 5334 Belt rd. nw., was reported missing by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Forrest G. Sedgwick, yesterday. The child had left her father early the previous evening to attend a neighborhood movie, and failed to return home. Police are looking for her.

Veteran of War I Reenlisted When Son Was Reported Lost

THE RADERMANS—Harry, jr., and his father

When Harry Raderman, jr., 23, pharmacists mate first class, was reported missing in action after the battle of Savo Bay his father, a 50-year-old Navy veteran of World War 1, reenlisted to avenge the loss of his son.

Now Harry, jr., with an honorable discharge from the Navy for wounds received in action, is organizing wounded veterans of this war for the District American Legion Bond Rally, while his father, maintaining the naval traditions of the Radermans, is first musician stationed at Sampson, N. Y.

Young Raderman was adrift on a rubber raft for 14 days with 29 other crew members of the second vessel sunk under him when he was reported "missing in action."

During that time, Harry Raderman, sr., once a member of the famous John Philip Sousa Band, and a "big time" radio musician in New York, went back to war in the Navy.

Harry Raderman, jr., raised in a Navy tradition, enlisted in March, 1939. He wasn't sure of the precise date when his father reenlisted because "I was away from home at the time." He was on a raft in the South Pacific.

After his return to Washington he married Ruth Miller of Washington, wearing the Navy blue for the last time at the ceremony September 6, 1943. He is enthusiastic about getting wounded veterans out for the Legion Bond Rally February 14 for a number of reasons. One of them is that his father organized the John Philip Sousa Post No. 1 of the American Legion in New York City and Harry, jr., feels that he's pretty much following in his father's footsteps in this war. He is a member of the George Washington Post No. 1 of the Legion here, and makes his home at 1633 Webster st. nw.

Widow of War I Veteran Feels She's Forgotten Woman Now

Washington's forgotten woman is a widow of a World War I veteran who is trying to convince the Veterans' Administration she and her children are entitled to a pension, hold down a job, recover from an illness and find an apartment by tomorrow in the war-crowded Capital.

She is Mrs. Dorothy Caulfield who, with her two children, James, 10, and Dorothy, 14, an honor student at St. Gabriel's School, must leave their temporary accommodations at 17th st. and Columbia rd. nw., tomorrow. To make Mrs. Caulfield has been ill and unable to look for an apartment within the $70-$80 rental range she can afford.

A classified ad in The Washington Post, beginning "Are we forgotten entirely" brought in a number of offers to share apartments yesterday. But Mrs. Caulfield still hopes to find a furnished or unfurnished apartment where her children can live a normal life, and Dorothy can continue her high scholastic record at St. Gabriel's parochial school.

Mrs. Caulfield's husband, Howard Caulfield, died 19 months ago in Chicago where the family then lived. He was first sergeant of the Fifth Field Artillery in the First Division of World War I, and was wounded while serving overseas. But when Mrs. Caulfield presented claims for a veteran's widow and children pension, she found that the records of her husband's service had been lost. Starting with an affidavit that the records were dropped in the water when a ship was unloaded she is going along the weary way, entangled in red tape, of trying to prove her husband served his country.

Working as switchboard operator at Garfield Memorial Hospital, Mrs. Caulfield feels that she could keep things going if she can only find a convenient apartment.

"It's bad enough to have to prove that my husband served in World War I," Mrs. Caulfield said without bitterness last night, "but the thing that really hurts is the feeling that veterans of the other World War are forgotten."

Do you know of a two bedroom apartment for rent in St. Gabriel's parish, or close by?

Salvation Army Tax-Exemption Plea Opposed by Keech

A move by the Salvation Army to have removed from District tax rolls five real property holdings having an assessed value of $246,483 was opposed yesterday by Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech.

Eight other pieces of property owned by the organization with a total assessed value of nearly $352,000 already are tax-exempt because they are used either for charitable or religious purposes.

Keech's objections were disclosed in a report to Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee on a proposed bill which would relieve all of the Salvation Army's property from taxation.

He declared that the property the organization wants declared tax free is not used strictly for charitable or religious purposes and that Congress, in framing the District tax law, did not intend it to be exempted.

Keech also disclosed that the Salvation Army already had appealed the taxes imposed by the District on its nonexempt property to the Board of Tax Appeals and said it would be "inappropriate" for Congress to consider any new legislation to relieve additional property of taxation until the board or the Court of Appeals had "construed provisions of existing law and finally determined and to what extent such properties are exempted thereunder."

The most valuable of the properties the organization is seeking to have relieved of taxation is the Evangeline Hotel for women at 1330 L st. nw., which has an assessed valuation of $191,340.

Keech's report explained that the hotel is operated for profit and its income for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, amounted to $120,657.

Juvenile Delinquency Data Swamps D'Alesandro Mail

Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat) of Maryland was literally swamped yesterday with a mass of letters and published reports dealing with juvenile delinquency in Washington.

A House District Subcommittee which he heads will begin an investigation of the problem tomorrow at 11 a. m. in Room 345 of the old House Office Building.

D'Alesandro took all of the material which came chiefly from clergymen and public welfare authorities to his Baltimore home and expects to study it over the week-end.

One of the letters was written by the Rev. Joseph E. Gedra of the Church of the Immaculate Conception and protested against sex education in the secondary public schools.

"At present, there is entirely too much prominence given to sex stories, sex pictures, sex glorification," he declared. "As a result of this we are witnessing the horrible debacle of morality and the commission of all kinds of sex crimes. And if instructions on sex are to be given our high school students, then the bad situation which now exists will only become worse. Clearly then, the remedy is not sex education, or more talk about sex. What is needed is more talk about decency, purity and the control of one's will power."

From Rev. Carleton R. Ball of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, D'Alesandro received a summarized statement on juvenile delinquency and crime based on forum discussions at the church, one of which was led by Judge Fay L. Bentley of Juvenile Court who will be the principal witness at the initial hearing of the subcommittee. Her report showed an increase in delinquency cases from 1139 in 1932 to 3219 in 1942. Of these 3219 cases, it was pointed out, 1894 or 60 per cent were handled without formal court action and four-fifths of these were adjusted by the social work department.

Zoning Ruling Permits Negro Home Project

By Elwin Stouffer

In a "compromise" decision, apparently intended to appease all factions in the Bradbury Heights zoning fight, the District Zoning Commission issued a ruling yesterday dividing the area into three distinct zones.

The ruling allows construction of multiple-family low-cost housing in that section of the area bounded on the south by G st. se., and on the north by Woodlawn Cemetery and C st. se. This is the area in which a Washington contracting company has purchased land for the erection of a 600-unit Negro housing development.

The dispute flared into the open some weeks ago when the proposed construction was made known. For 20 years the entire area has had a zone "A" rating, which allows for such construction. Residents of the area and the Bradbury Heights Citizens Association had sought to have the rating changed to "A" restricted, which would have prevented the construction of anything but single detached houses.

Ruling in Detail

The commission's ruling was as follows:

1. The area lying north of G street se., west from a line 125 west of Benning rd., south from Woodlawn Cemetery and C st., and east of Burns st., Texas ave., and Ridge rd., will continue to be in the "A" zone.

2. The area lying south of G st., west from a line 125 feet west of Benning rd.; north from the intersection of Bowen rd. and Southern ave., and east from Ridge rd., to be in the "A" restricted zone rating.

3. The area bounded by Boulevard ave. on the west; by Alabama ave., and Bowen rd. on the north; by Southern ave. on the south, and by the intersection of 46th st. and Southern ave. on the east, was changed to "A" semi-restricted. (This rating allows for construction of semidetached homes and group homes with not over three families.)

4. The area bounded by Southern ave. in the south; by St. Louis and Fitch sts. on the east, and by a line 125 feet west of Benning rd. on the west, will retain its "A" zone rating.

Accompanying Statement

In rendering its opinion, the commission issued the following statement:

"The commission is of the opinion that a demarkation line along G st. se. provides a proper boundary between the improved portion of the area involved and acreage to the north. We feel that the decision is proper and in all fairness to those, who acquired the acreage in reliance on zoning which exists now and has existed for 20 years, and that the construction of multi-family housing on that land, in the judgment of the commission, will not affect adversely the single-family dwellings to the south."

Considered Unsatisfactory

Henry W. Austin, president of the Bradbury Heights Citizens' Association, said yesterday he considered the ruling unsatisfactory and that he would confer with members of his association and determine what steps might be taken to appeal.

The commission adopted two of the suggestions made by the Zoning Advisory Council and modified a third. The council had advised placing all of the area west of the line 125 feet west of Benning rd. under an "A" restricted rating. This would have eliminated the building of the 600-unit project.

The controversy attracted the attention last week of Mrs. Roosevelt, who commented on it in her newspaper column and later toured the section. At that time she said that zoning restrictions, detrimental to Negro housing needs in Washington, be viewed in the light of "the greatest good for the greatest number.

Girls' Housing Dispute Won By Civilians

The Arlington Farms controversy was settled yesterday, with the Navy told, in effect, to dock its 2000 WAVES in some other port—because Government girls are going to get the rooms in the palatial dormitories promised them.

The decision, reached during a heated conference yesterday morning of War, Navy, Civil Service, Budget Bureau and FBI officials—with the Executive Office of the President represented to add importance—was announced officially by Philip M. Klutznick, assistant administrator of the National Housing Agency.

"Arlington Farms and other Government dormitories in the Washington area will continue to honor outstanding commitments for accommodations made by Federal agencies to prospective women workers recruited for war jobs here," said the (to some 1000 civilian girls) highly satisfactory statement.

The Navy's needs for housing its enlisted WAVES, "without the necessity of constructing additional barracks," will be met through a "careful resurvey of all available space in Washington suitable for use by single women workers."

Other Federal agencies are to cooperate in limiting housing promises to future personnel recruits so as to allow as much space as possible to the WAVES in the rapidly filling dormitories.

Prison Officials to Meet

Eastern seaboard prison officials will meet tomorrow and Tuesday in Temporary Building E here to formulate a program to increase food production and industrial activity in penal institutions. Wartime problems of State and Federal prisons will also be discussed at the two-day session.

CARRIER WASP'S SURVIVORS ABOARD RESCUE SHIP—INSERT, THE LEXINGTON GOING DOWN

Involved Questions Arising From Sinking Answered in Bureau Bulletin for 'All Hands'

By James F. King

When a ship is sunk, what happens to its organization and its records? What has to be done before the survivors are clothed and equipped, with money in their pockets and orders for new assignments? In fact, how are the survivors determined and how are they reported? Why does it take so long to give out a list?

The Navy answers all these questions and many more in a recent issue of the Bureau of Naval Personnel's information bulletin—a bulletin addressed to "all hands."

Referring first to the question of who does what, the bulletin explains that the officers and men separated from their vessel remain members of their own ship's company, even when taken aboard another ship, until the company is dissolved or is reassigned.

Last to Leave Ship

The commanding officer's duties are to remain by his ship with officers and crew "as long as necessary" and to save as much life and Government property as possible, to be the last person to leave his ship, to make a report to the Secretary of the Navy as soon as possible.

If the ship is lost in waters adjacent to the United States, the commanding officer must "repair to the nearest naval station with the crew." If the loss occurs near foreign territory, he must "lose no time, after making all efforts to save property, in returning with his officers and crew to the fleet or squadron to which they belonged, or to the United States, if acting singly.

The executive officer looks after the muster roll, and the Supply Corps officers take care of the pay records, public money, "and such other public papers and property in the order of their value, as circumstances permit."

Usually, the Navy points out, a ship's survivors are picked up by other vessels in their unit and they may be scattered widely. Each group is responsible to its senior surviving officer and these officers are responsible to the senior surviving officer of the original ship's company. They are all under the discipline, however, of their respective ships, their status being that of "working passengers."

Don't Expect Too Much

The rescue ships furnish medical care and food. Men aboard them may be able to donate clothing, or there may be some "foul weather clothing" available temporarily. The commanding officer of a rescue ship can issue minimum essentials to meet emergency requirements.

But, warns the Navy, "don't expect too much! When the Wasp went down, for instance, there were 2000-odd survivors to be taken off by accompanying ships. One destroyer, which normally carried a complement of about 200, found itself with some 700 additional men aboard. The prospects of getting outfitted a la Saks-Fifth Avenue under such circumstances are accordingly diminished."

After arrival at port, officers of the sunken vessel report to the commandant of the naval district, who advises the Bureau of Personnel of their names and ranks. They remain on temporary duty. In exceptional cases they can get leave if the leave address is in the immediate vicinity.

Leave if Possible

Listed by ratings, the men are reported to the officer in charge of distributing personnel for the fleet or activity to which the ship belonged. They get liberty, but no leave until new orders are received. Then they get up to 30 days, including travel time, if circumstances permit.

Officers and men are told what facts concerning the ship's loss have been made public and they are warned not to divulge any additional information. Lean over backwards to be cautious, they are told.

Meanwhile, pay accounts are reconstructed and reopened, skeleton health records are prepared, changes in service records are reported and claims for lost clothing and other possessions are submitted. Pay is resumed promptly on the basis of sworn statements, but the statements are checked later against the records of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

Reimbursed for Loss

Men may receive reimbursement in cash for the loss of watches, eyeglasses, Bluejackets' Manual, toilet articles up to $10 with a $5 maximum for a lost razor, cuff links and clothing worn by chief petty officers, stewards and cooks, and money deposited for safekeeping—but not cash. If you have cash with you when your ship sinks, the Navy says, hang on to it!

Allotments for savings or other authorized purposes continue without interruption even if the records go down with the ship. Amounts due and unpaid on the last payday are credited to the new pay accounts immediately.

Reporting casualties is the duty of the commanding officer and he must first find out, of course, who is a casualty. If the muster roll has not been lost and the ship's company has been rescued by a single vessel, the job is a very simple one. Otherwise, the information has to be assembled by inquiring from each of the rescued men as to what he knows of his shipmates—which he saw rescued and which he knows were lost.

Phrases Specified

The Navy says that until these reports can be assembled and checked and next of kin can be notified, announcement of a ship's loss can lead only to confusion. "An important reason for holding up announcement of a ship casualty is the humane one that, until the status of every man aboard is ascertained, it is cruel to subject his relatives to uncertainty and worry over his fate."

In reporting casualties, the commanding officer must not use such phrases as "lost," "perished," or "missing and presumed dead." He must include them in one of these categories: "Dead," "killed in action," "killed (no enemy action)," "wounded in action," "injured (no enemy action)," "missing in action," or "missing (no enemy action)."

The commanding officer must report full name, rank or rating, file or service number and, in the case of the dead or missing, the date of death or beginning of missing status. Persons must be reported missing unless evidence or testimony of their death is conclusive, says the Navy.

Letters Required

In all cases of death or accident to persons in the naval service, it is the duty of the commanding officer to write the next of kin a personal letter acquainting the man's relatives with all the known and pertinent circumstances—and he must route the letter through the Bureau of Navy Personnel so it will not reach its destination before the loss of the ship has been announced and the next of kin notified officially.

Commanding officers are cautioned to make sure that the official record of casualties coincides with the facts he gives relatives in his personal letter. If there is justification for reporting to the Bureau of Naval Personnel that a man is missing in action, when the facts known to the commanding officer imply death, the Navy says, he should tell the family the facts and explain why he must report the man missing.

More Dogs Join Heroes' Ranks

Six Outstanding Marine Canines Will Be Promoted to Corporals

Six dogs, donated to the United States Marine Corps for war service, have won commendations and will shortly be promoted to rank of corporal for their fine work during the Marine landings at Empress Augusta Bay on Bougainville.

The Navy Department said the dogs "hit the beach" with the Marines on November 1 and, like their human companions, endured life in foxholes, loss of sleep and reduced rations until the beachhead was secure.

Specially trained to work closely with combat troops, the dogs showed no fear of grenade explosions, gun discharges and sniping. Two of them were wounded but will return to action.

CAESAR, a 3-year-old German shepherd donated by Max Glazer of New York, served as messenger between a Marine company and its battalion command post, carrying messages to the rear. During the first day of the landing and on the second day, after the Japs had cut the company's telephone wires, Caesar was their only means of communication.

When a Jap sneaked up to the jungle foxhole where Caesar and his handler were spending the night, Caesar leaped from the hole, attacked the Jap's weapon arm and forced him to drop a hand grenade.

The Jap shot Caesar twice and fled. The dog was carried back to the regimental command post on a stretcher. He had made nine official runs between his company and the command post, two under fire.

3-Week National Headache Is Due On Ration Tokens

OPA expects a 3-week national headache with the switch to ration tokens February 27. Reason:

The new red and blue stamps for meat and processed foods will have a uniform value of 10 points, regardless of the denomination printed on them.

Some of the current brown and green stamps will be valid through March 20 but will be worth only the number of points marked on the face.

Ration tokens will be given as change for the new stamps, not for the old.

But OPA thinks rationing will be much simpler once we're through the transition period.

Part of the Plan From the Beginning

BY EDWARD T. FOLLIARD

Gen. Mark Clark's Fifth Army, in a daring leap-frog operation, has landed on the west coast of central Italy and the seige of Rome is on.

The first communique issued by Gen. Sir Harold R. L. G. Alexander, commander of the Central Mediterranean Force, did not identify the invasion point. However, the Berlin radio said that landings were made at the mouth of the Tiber River, 16 miles southwest of Rome, and the port of Nettuno, about 32 miles from Rome.

It is interesting to note that this assault behind the German battle line farther south had been planned for some time, probably from the very beginning of the Battle of Italy.

Newspaper correspondents at Allied headquarters in Algiers, a dispatch reveals, had known about it since mid-October.

Thus we have the answer to the puzzlement over the slow progress of the Allied armies in Italy. It is now clear that Alexander never intended that the American Fifth and the British Eighth Armies would spend a whole winter battling the Germans in the Appenines.

Over in the Pentagon Building they say that this new operation will be in an extremely critical stage for at least 48 hours, just as at Salerno. It would appear that Clark was able to achieve a measure of tactical surprise. However, it will take him at least 48 hours to build up his strength in the invasion areas.

At this writing nothing is known here about the strength of the German forces around the Tiber or the port of Nettuno. The Germans would appear to be faced with one of two alternatives.

1. They can reinforce their troops around the invasion points by moving troops northward from Cassino and leave a rear guard at that stronghold.

2. They may elect to bring down troops from the north, from around the Po Valley.

That the Germans will attempt a strong counterattack is taken for granted. The only question is when it will come and where. If they were caught with weak forces at the invasion points, they may choose to launch their counterattack after the Americans and British move inland and are beyond the range of their naval guns.

Invasion of Europe Has No Parallels

The ballyhoo stage is over so far as the "second front" is concerned. From now on most of the speculation about this great operation will come from those at whom it is aimed—the Germans.

Military men here in Washington, and especially those who are in a position to know what's going on, are not talking about the invasion any more—on the record, off the record or any other way.

They will talk freely about the war in the Pacific; Europe is out.

The same taciturnity, apparently, is being practiced in London, where Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower has now set up his headquarters.

For this and other reasons, we can look forward to a sharp falling off in speculation about the second front in the days ahead. Some of the other reasons are to be found in a memorandum which went out to newspaper editors and radio broadcasters last week. It was written by Byron Price, director of Censorship, and it said:

"The coming invasion of Europe confronts voluntary censorship with its greatest single responsibility. There is no way to conceal from the enemy that an invasion is in prospect, or that the British Isles will be used as a base.

"What we must protect at all hazards is information of the time and place of attack, the strength of the attacking force and its technical make-up and equipment.

"This is not a field for the customary competitive news-gathering. No American newspaperman or broadcaster will want the distinction of being first to disclose where, when and how our troops will strike. But no one should forget for a moment that inadvertent disclosures are exactly as valuable to the enemy as deliberate disclosures."

Bloody Enough

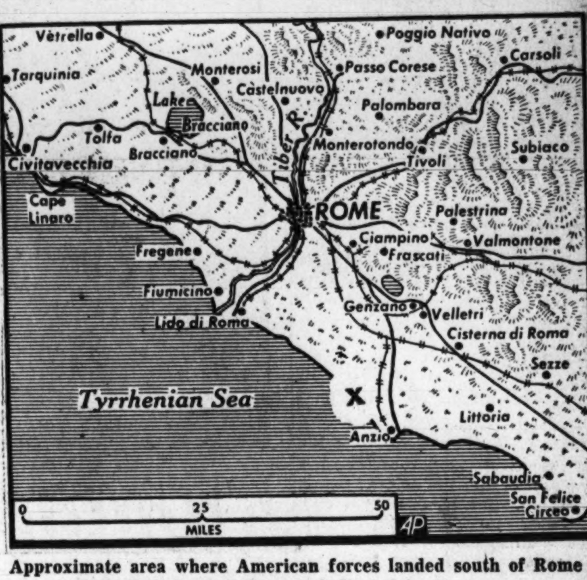
Director Price here reminds editors and broadcasters of the provisions of the censorship code, and adds:

"We need urgently a complete moratorium on backstairs gossip and hairline authenticity regarding this critical battle . . . Recently the codes have been relaxed in several respects, but in no respect which touches the fortunes of General Eisenhower's invading army. Please take no chances."

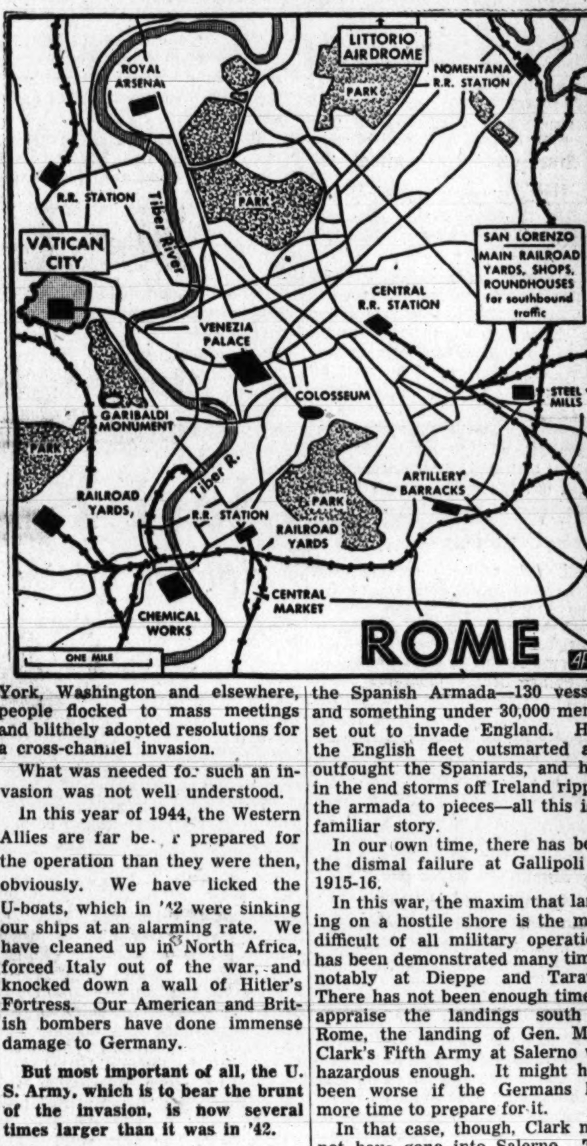
The invasion of western Europe will be hard and bloody enough, heaven knows, without adding to the difficulties through careless talk or writings.

That fact is thoroughly appreciated in newspaper and radio circles; and the prospect is, therefore, that most of the "experting" henceforth will have to come from Berlin, which guesses on Monday that the invasion will start in 15 days and trumps this on Friday with a guess of 90 days—all, of course, for fishing purposes.

As the day draws nearer for the Western Front, the magnitude of the operation—and likewise the hazards and the possible cost in blood—are far better appreciated than they were, say, in 1942. That was the year when the second-front clamor in Moscow reached a peak. In this country, in New York, Washington and elsewhere, people flocked to mass meetings and blithely adopted resolutions for a cross-channel invasion.



Approximate area where American forces landed south of Rome and behind German lines is indicated by X on map.



What was needed for such an invasion was not well understood.

In this year of 1944, the Western Allies are far better prepared for the operation than they were then, obviously. We have licked the U-boats, which in '42 were sinking our ships at an alarming rate. We have cleaned up in North Africa, forced Italy out of the war, and knocked down a wall of Hitler's Fortress. Our American and British bombers have done immense damage to Germany.

But most important of all, the U. S. Army, which is to bear the brunt of the invasion, is now several times larger than it was in '42.

No Parallel

Even so the undertaking is fraught with danger. America and Britain are planning to do what Hitler wouldn't dare to do in 1940, when he was at the zenith of his military power and England stood alone, almost bereft of weapons.

There is no parallel for the tremendous operation, in this or any other war.

The most astonishing thing about it is the absence of overall secrecy. We have announced that we are coming; the Germans know we are coming, and they have had three years and a half to get ready for us.

It is far different from 1917-18, when our A. E. F. was able to land on the friendly soil of France.

None of the famous invasions of history seems to offer a parallel to this one that lies ahead. When Xerxes the Great led his army into Greece, over a bridge of boats across the Hellespont, he had one great advantage over Eisenhower: Not all of Greece was prepared to resist, as a result the Persian conqueror did not have to fight his way up the beaches. He marched through Thrace and Macedonia, and it was not until Leonidas and his 300 Spartans tried to stop him at Thermopylae that he ran into any real resistance.

From there he went on to occupy and pillage Athens, only to lose out in the end when his fleet was beaten at Salamis.

Hannibal, in the Third Punic War (218-217 B. C.), took an army from Africa to the Continent to march on Italy. However, he landed in Spain, and Spain at that time was already held by Hannibal's Carthaginians.

The record is loaded with invasion attempts that ended in disaster.

One such happened in 1588 when the Spanish Armada—130 vessels and something under 30,000 men—set out to invade England. How the English fleet outsmarted and outfought the Spaniards, and how in the end storms off Ireland ripped the armada to pieces—all this is a familiar story.

In our own time, there has been the dismal failure at Gallipoli in 1915-16.

In this war, the maxim that landing on a hostile shore is the most difficult of all military operations has been demonstrated many times, notably at Dieppe and Tarawa. There has not been enough time to appraise the landings south of Rome, the landing of Gen. Mark Clark's Fifth Army at Salerno was hazardous enough. It might have been worse if the Germans had more time to prepare for it.

In that case, though, Clark may not have gone into Salerno. The chances are that he would have landed some place else.

The Germans can't be strong everywhere; if they try to be, they will be strong nowhere. That is another military truism, and it is one that must haunt the Germans in this fateful year of '44.

The Swedish newspaperman, Arvid Fredborg, who was stationed in Berlin from 1941 to last summer, has given a good picture of Germany's dilemma in his book, "Behind the Steel Wall." He gives an "amateur list" of German forces scattered around the Fortress of Europe—145 divisions on the East Front, 56 in Western Europe, 29 in Italy, and so on.

"This table shows," he writes, "how hard it has been for the Germans to arrange their forces so as to meet the simultaneous threats of invasion from the East, the West and the South.

"If they had retained superiority in the air, the problem would have been simplified. But with all their communication lines subject to air attacks and with the railways becoming more and more disorganized, the Germans can no longer utilize the great advantage they possess of operating on inner lines. The Wehrmacht has lost its greatest weapon—its mobility."

Fredborg, incidentally, estimates German losses in this war—dead, badly wounded, missing and prisoners—at 3,500,000.

If Fredborg's figure of 3,500,000 is correct, and not many military men hereabouts would quarrel with it, then Germany's losses in this war are well below what they were in the last war, although this one has lasted longer. Every year, it has been estimated, about 700,000 boys reach military age in Germany.

On that basis, four years and four months of war have made something like 3 million new soldiers available to Hitler.

2 Proposals For Retaining The Power to Wage War

By Ernest Lindley

During the last 10 days two concrete proposals for maintaining the military power of the United States have come from high official sources. Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox proposed universal military training. Charles E. Wilson, executive vice chairman of WPB, proposed that adequate research and industrial capacity for war be kept "in being."

Neither proposal pretended to be a complete program of military readiness. First on the list would have to come a large Navy and powerful Air Force, an Army much larger than we had between the two great wars, and the bases from which these forces could promptly undertake the primary duties assigned to them. Military and naval authorities are talking in terms of total permanent armed forces of between one million and two million men.

All estimates must be highly tentative, since much depends on the policies adopted by other victors and by the degree of their cooperation in preventing the arming or rearming of other potentially powerful nations.

Morale Value

Mr. Knox proposes to back up the permanent professional armed forces by giving every boy, at the age of 17 or 18, one year of military or naval training. This plan would build up an immense reserve which could be drawn upon and whipped into shape for active service on relatively short notice.

It would, in the opinion of Mr. Knox, among others, help to build up a sense of responsibility to the Nation.

The benefits to young men of a year of such service would be numerous—including their physical improvement, especially if exemptions were granted for only the most serious defects. Universal military service was widely discussed after the first world war, but failed to make much headway against the comfortable idea that there would not be another major war.

Mr. Knox reviews the proposal at this time for a practical reason. The end of this war will probably find some five million or six million American men in uniform on foreign soil. Most of them will be eager to get home as quickly as possible. Yet, the national security may require the retention of large forces abroad for some time to come. Universal military service would provide younger men to replace some of the veterans.

Some Criticism

Universal military service does not have by any means the unanimous support of the top professional men in the Army and Navy. It would require a large instructional staff and the maintenance of extensive facilities. Some fear that it would be regarded as a substitute for completely trained and equipped mobile forces of sufficient size, or that the country would not foot the bill for both.

The argument is also made that the training of fighting men should be kept separate from the educational, health-repairing and related activities which would accompany universal military service.

Mr. Wilson put the stress on scientific, technical and industrial readiness for war. The first necessity, as he sees it, is to assure that adequate research is devoted to the instruments of war.

Between the two wars, the research facilities of the Navy and the Army were starved. They got notable results with small amounts of money—as did such organizations as the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics—but the outbreak of the war found us well behind other nations, especially Germany, in the development of many types of war equipment. Moreover, some of our newer devices had been insufficiently tested and showed weaknesses which cost the lives of American fighting men as late as 1943.

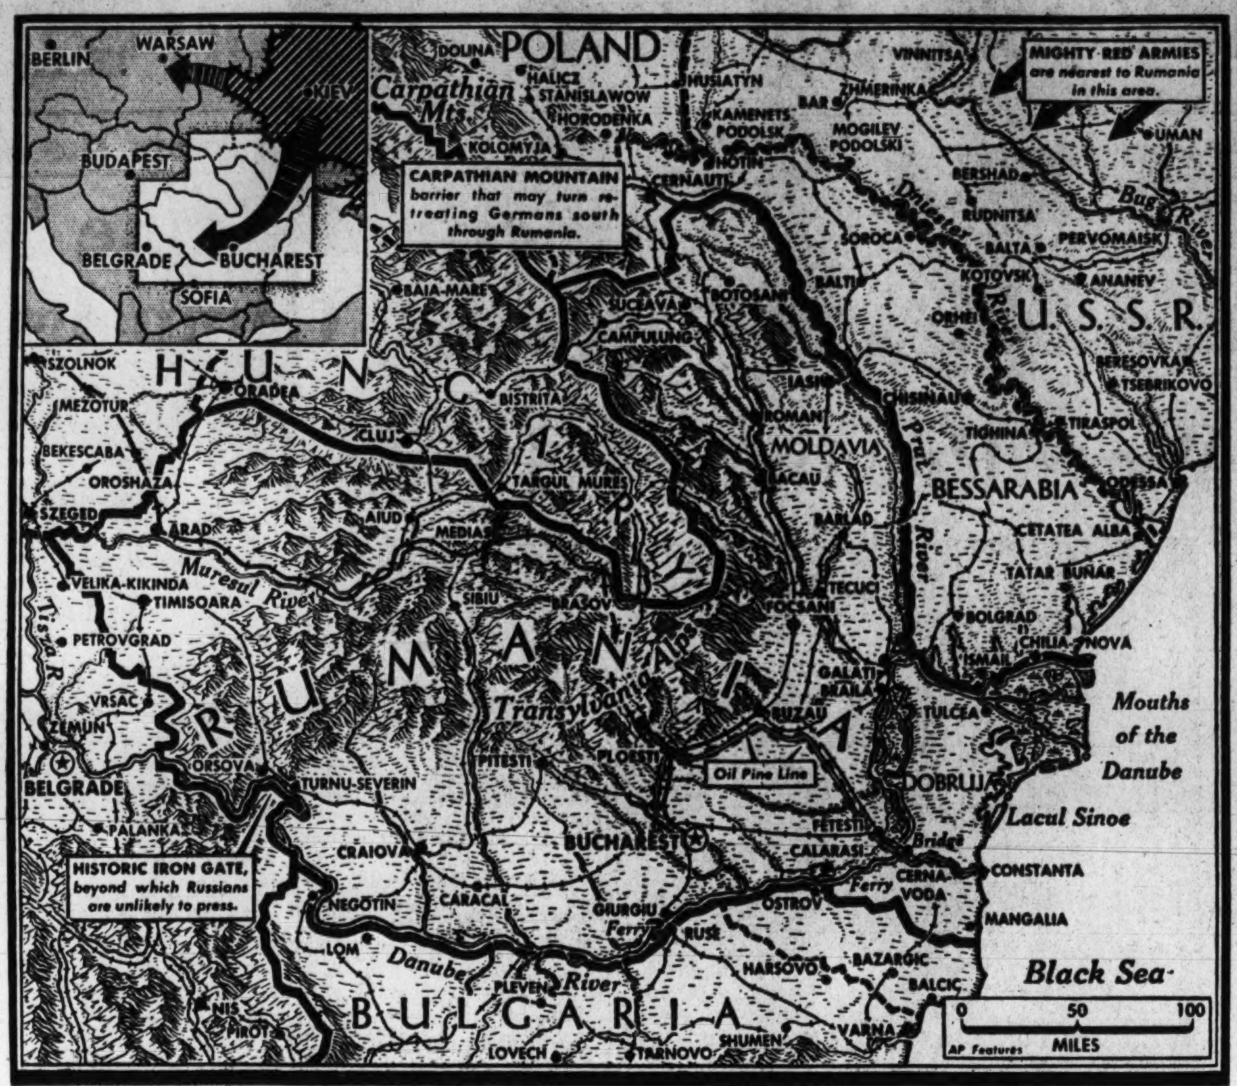
Tops in Science

The mobilization of the private research facilities of the Nation, through the Office of Scientific Research and Development, and the expansion of the research work of the armed services, have produced an amazing forward surge. Some 7000 civilan engineers and technicians, apart from their assistants, are working on war problems under the direction of OSRD. No nation except Germany can even approach us in quantity of first-class scientific brains and research facilities.

The practical question posed by Mr. Wilson is whether these are to be so completely reconverted to peacetime problems as they were after the First World War.

Mr. Wilson, likewise, wants American industry kept in readiness for war production, largely through educational orders and close liaison with the armed services.

Research and production are the foundation of our military power. Mr. Wilson believes that if the world knew that we were "keeping the fires of scientific and developmental effort burning, and that we were ready to shift our industry quickly to the production of these thoroughly tested and proven superior weapons," the chances that another Hitler or Tojo would undertake to conquer the world would be much more remote.



Rumania: Runway Out of Russia

Rumania, historic highway for such conquerors as the Goths, Huns and Mongols, may soon find itself once more a military thoroughfare—this time for the avenging Russians.

The Germans weren't worrying alone about their troops in the Dnieper bend when they launched desperate counterattacks in that area. Another highly important consideration was the protection of Rumania, with its oil fields and broad acres of grain. The Germans need both.

West of the Dniester the Germans face the danger of being hemmed in against the Carpathian Mountains and split in two—one portion forced south into Rumania, the other north and west into Poland.

And once rolling into Rumania, it is likely the Russians will push on down through the vast L-shaped Prut-Danube Valley to envelope at least the Ploesti oil field, Germany's only big source of good lubricating oil, and the lower Walachian grain belt.

Already they will have occupied Bessarabia, fertile as the adjoining Russian Ukraine, across the Dniester.

It seems unlikely, unless the western Allies by then have penetrated deeply into the Balkans, that the Russians would attempt to drive on into Hungary and Central Europe. The Iron Gate, historic passage through the southwest Transylvanian Alps, might be a death trap and it is likely the retreating Germans would blow up bridges and tunnels in that area anyway.

Similarly, according to an excellently placed Washington authority, it is not likely the Russians would try to pursue the Germans through the Carpathians and Transylvanian Alps into Transylvania, the grain-growing bowl in northwestern Rumania.

The best Rumanian railroad—a double-tracked line—runs north from Bucharest through the gorge-filled mountains, then west to Budapest and Berlin. It would be simple for the Germans to blow up strategic bridges.

The railroads into Bulgaria are so sketchy as to almost rule out any further drive in that direction. Russia and Bulgaria are not at war.

Invasion of Rumania from Russia is not quite so simple as it might seem, at that. For one thing, the railroads of Bessarabia, held for more than a century by Russia, are all "oriented" toward the Russian cities of Odessa, Kiev and Moscow. Comparatively few lines run westward into Rumania—certainly enough, however, to supply an army assisted by truck columns.

The Russians claim for their own all of Bessarabia, which they lost to Rumania after the last war. They have always protested the award, which, incidentally, the United States has never recognized. The Russians also might feel compelled at the peace table to claim the upper Dobruja for military reasons. The lower Dobruja, taken from Bulgaria by Rumania after World War I, has already been reoccupied by the Bulgars, even though they are on the same side as the Rumanians.

Start Reeducation on Prisoners

By William L. Shirer

I may be wrong, but inasmuch as the President says we are going to stamp out nazism in Germany and the Vice President says we are going to reeducate the master race, I've been wondering whether it wouldn't be possible and perhaps even desirable to begin right here at home with the specimens we have in the German prisoner of war camps.

According to the press, there are 45,000 of them. Judging by reports, they live in a weird super-Nazi world of their own.

And we do absolutely nothing about it except on occasions—which seem to be growing in frequency—when a Gestapo-like, kangaroo Nazi court "sentences" a prisoner to death or to a beating because he may have been careless enough to remark that he thought Hitler was slipping or given expression to some other such "treasonable" utterance.

Of course, you may hold that these 45,000 German prisoners of war are not worth the trouble, and that it would be a waste of our time to do a little reeducating or even a little democratic propaganda in their midst, and the point has its merits.

You could argue that the whole German generation that came to age under Hitler, and set out so enthusiastically to conquer the world, is a totally lost generation.

But some of its members will survive this war. Most of our 45,000 prisoners will. And they'll go back to Germany some day and become the ringleaders for the Great Revenge, for the Third World War.

This is not just a personal opinion. It was expressed the other day by an American Army chaplain who had been serving in a prisoners of war camp at Huntsville, Tex., and thus had some first-hand, up-to-the-minute experience in the matter.

"Unless we evangelize these men," he was quoted as saying, "they will return to Germany after the war with nothing but contempt for our ideals, more than eager to fight another war."

Already they are getting away with murder and I mean that literally. The chaplain himself reported: "Sixty per cent of the prisoners are confirmed Nazis . . . The Nazis are treacherous, often trying after midnight in the barracks to lynch their comrades who are not Nazis."

Recently we have had some specific examples of this. Only a fortnight ago the press associations carried the story of the end of Pvt. Franz Kettner, an Austrian. While in protective custody in the guardhouse of the prison camp at Concordia, Kans., he committed suicide by slashing his wrists. It was not the American guards he was afraid of.

"I'm afraid," he wrote to his wife and child, "the Nazis are going to kill me." That's why he had asked for American protection.

A 'Death Sentence'

This was the third suicide in six months at the one camp. A couple of months before a German captain had committed suicide after being "sentenced" to death by a Nazi kangaroo court. It had found him "guilty" of "making remarks against Hitler" and of having betrayed a plot to escape while the prisoners were still overseas. No pistol being available, the court provided the captain with a rope with which to hang himself, which he did.

This Nazi reign of terror apparently covers the slightest action distasteful to the fanatical Hitlerite prisoners of war. A reporter for the New York Times magazine recently visited a German prisoners of war camp in West Virginia and reported the following incident:

"One night recently one of the prisoners listened to the news from the Eastern front. When the announcer had finished, the prisoner took a piece of paper, drew a crude map, and showed his comrades just how much ground must have been lost. In the morning the camp officers found him badly beaten up. He has never told who did the beating. All he will say is: 'They say I'm not a good German.'"

Generous Treatment

The reporter then proceeds to draw a strange conclusion. "The incident," he writes, "seems to be a justification for the attitude of the camp's commanding officer, Lieut. Col. Frank A. Hunter, who is against indoctrination, against trying to force any sort of new opinions on his prisoners."

From my own knowledge of Germans and Nazis, my reaction would have been that the incident was decidedly not a justification for the colonel's hands-off policy—just the opposite.

However, the colonel, we may be sure, was merely following orders from Washington.

The U. S. Army is in charge of war prisoners and there is much to praise in the liberal and generous manner in which it has interpreted the Geneva Convention in the treatment of Axis prisoners. They eat as they have never eaten in their lives because, in accordance with the convention, they are given the same fare as American troops. Their barracks are the same, their sanitary facilities the same, and so forth.

And if, as some who have visited the camps report, the Nazi prisoners are merely contemptuous of our warm-hearted generosity, the U. S. Army authorities still deserve congratulations for their Christian attitude.

Where they are open to criticism, it seems to me, is in their curious tolerance of the fanatical Nazism which dominates the German prisoners' camps in this country.

In most cases that have come to my attention, the Army has justified this position by urging that it is dictated by the terms of the Geneva Convention. I have heard it argued that the convention forbids any kind of reeducation or democratic propaganda among the Axis prisoners of war. At the present time certain democratic German language publications are not allowed by our authorities to circulate in the prisoner camps.

The Army's Reasons

Why? The Army is quite frank about it. Recently some German prisoners wrote to a certain anti-Nazi German language publication in New York asking for subscriptions to it. One prisoner wrote he was trying to get the American camp authorities to allow a group subscription of 100 copies of the journal.

The editors wrote to the commanding officer of the camp who referred them to the Provost Marshal General's office in Washington. In due time that office sent the editors the following reply:

"The Office of Censorship expresses the feeling that the extreme anti-Nazi views expressed in your publication might be more misunderstood than helpful to German prisoners in this country, and that it might tend to encourage political dissension within the camps.

"The United States has an obligation under the Geneva Convention toward prisoners of war, and it is thought that the injection into any prisoners of war camp of any matter which might tend to disturb the harmony thereof would be contrary to the intent of that convention."

Though I am not a legal expert, I have just reread all 97 articles of the Geneva convention and I must confess that I cannot find a single word in any of them which could be construed as preventing the American authorities from allowing German prisoners of war to read anti-Nazi publications if they request them.

That there already is some political dissension in the camps is evident from the suicides and the beatings of the anti-Nazi prisoners. Anyone with any knowledge of German and Nazi mentality knows that this Nazi terror against those German prisoners who no longer wish to conform to Hitler's teachings could be stopped overnight by simply letting the Gestapo-minded prisoners know that this democracy simply will not tolerate such nonsense.

There is nothing in the Geneva Convention against doing this.

Then it would be possible for the German prisoners who are still sane, or who show signs of returning to sanity, to at least get the democratic literature they are entitled to receive. And if firmness—with strict justice—were shown, there would be little trouble and little dissension. Firmness is what Germans like and expect and respect. And a beginning might thus be made with some of the problem-children of our time.

Gen. Stilwell Sees New Road Across Burma

By Thoburn Wiant

With General Stilwell in Burma, (AP).—American construction genius has pushed the new Ledo Road through the primeval jungle of northern Burma almost on the heels of Chinese troops clearing the zone of Japanese.

The results as well as the hazards of this Allied effort now are being viewed first hand by wiry, wisecracking Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, American commander in the Far East, who is making his first tour of Burma since he marched out of the country in May, 1942, after it had been overrun by the invaders.

The results already are good. The new highway which will substitute for the old Burma Road already extends deep into northern Burma and is being used by trucks. Ahead of the completed road are trails which a jeep may travel and they end only a short distance behind the front lines.

Heavy Fighting Ahead

But the retaking of northern Burma to permit construction of the Ledo Road through to the Burma Road is bound to be difficult. The Japanese are unlikely to give up this important area without a terrific struggle.

It is apparent the Japanese lack planes for an aerial supply line, for they are using elephants, horses and porters, and living off the land as much as possible.

Stilwell came into this thick jungle several days ago by airplane and jeep, and since then has covered every part of Hukawng Valley, where Americans equipped and trained Chinese soldiers commanded by Gens. Sun Li-jen and Ling Yao-hsiang have pushed the Japanese into the upper reaches of the Chindwin River.

The Chinese have been mopping up the Hukawng Valley but the Japanese still hold positions around Taro in the western part of the valley and Sharaw in the eastern end. They are using pillboxes made of earth and bamboo so expertly camouflaged they cannot be detected 10 feet away. Snipers who remain hidden in trees for days at a time also are causing trouble.

Afoot and by Jeep

Wearing a tin helmet and field jacket with no insignia and carrying a carbine, Stilwell is traveling afoot and by jeep from one combat zone to another. His disguise didn't fool the Chinese, who know him, and he stopped to talk with enlisted men as well as officers, speaking fluently in their own language.

I reached this spot after a flight of several hundred miles in a transport plane and another hundred mile trip in an aerial jeep piloted by Sergt. Richard (Bud) Dickson, 23, of Englewood, Colo., who was a Church of the Nazarene evangelist in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Utah before joining the Army.

Today I followed Stilwell in a jeep driven by Col. Milton Potter, Galveston, Tex., along with Col. Rothwell H. Brown of Washington, D. C. Both are key officers in this area.

Blood Tests Will Be Used in Chaplin-Berry Paternity Case

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—Agglutinogens—substances which cause blood to coagulate—will form the basis of blood tests in the Charles Chaplin-Joan Berry paternity case.

Miss Berry, 24, filed suit in Los Angeles last June against the 54-year-old movie pantomimist and producer, charging that he is the father of her then expected child—a girl born last October 2.

In the two recognized blood tests for parentage, one by blood group and the other by blood type, the wrong group or the wrong type of blood will cause coagulation in another blood.

Two laws of heredity govern the tests by blood grouping. These laws do not prove parentage, but only may prove that a certain parentage is impossible.

Chaplin Denies Parentage

Miss Berry's suit asked $10,000 for medical care, $2500 monthly for support and $5000 for court and attorney's fees. Chaplin denied paternity but agreed subsequently to pay $15,800 for birth expenses, lawyers' costs and blood tests.

It was stipulated that if the tests indicated the possibility of parenthood, the suit would go to trial. Jack Irwon, Miss Berry's attorney, says these tests will be made soon after February 2.

Of the two laws of heredity which govern group tests, the first is that agglutinogen factors A and B cannot appear in the blood of a child unless present in the blood of one or both parents. The other law is that a parent belonging to group AB cannot give rise to a group O child, and a group O parent cannot give rise to a group AB child.

The types of blood, as distinguished from the groups, are based on two additional agglutinogens, M and N. M and N result in three types of blood: M, N, and MN. Sometimes the blood grouping test fails, but the blood trying test proves successful.

Example Cited

Dr. Alexander S. Wiener, serologist and bacteriologist for the chief medical exmainer of New York City, cites such a case in his book on blood groups and transfusion. In a parentage case, blood group tests showed the wife belonged to group A and the husband to group B. The child was in group A. This union of B and A could produce any one of four blood groups, so the group test meant nothing.

In the blood typing test, however, the woman's type was N and the child's was M. An N parent cannot have an M child, indicating the child was not hers.

Six matings by blood types are possible:

M marries N—Only MN children.

N marries N—Only N children.

M marries M—Only M children.

By blood groups, 10 matings are possible:

O marries A—Only O or A children rseult.

O marries O—Only O children.

A marries A—Only O or A children.

A marries AB—Only A, B or AB children.

B marries AB—Only A, B or AB children.

AB marries AB—Only A, B or AB children.

Reparations Promise A Postwar Puzzle

By James D. White

The reparations question is a hot potato of planning for the postwar world.

Victory over Germany is near enough for General Eisenhower to predict it for 1944, yet no Allied government has made any official statement on whether Germany is to pay for the deliberate damage she has done.

I any discussion of reparations, two questions immediately arise:

1. Should Germany pay—are the victors going to demand it.

2. CAN Germany pay?

Observers who attended the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Conference at Atlantic City are convinced that Germany's victims are going to insist on payment.

Delegates from the occupied countries in Europe discussed reparations only as they related to general relief problems—yet the veins stood out on the necks of seasoned European diplomats as they told of wanton destruction by the Nazis.

They have not forgotten Lidice, Rotterdam, Warsaw, Kharkov, Nanking.

Agree on 3 Points

In the absence of official statements, let's look at what a few economists have been writing on the subject.

Articles published in Russia, the United States and Britain show striking agreement on three points:

1. Germany has wrought so much destruction that she probably never can pay for it.

2. Reparations generally should not be paid in money.

3. Payment in goods will suit Soviet Russia, but will be difficult for capitalist countries to absorb.

Germany was called upon to pay a bill of 32 billion dollars after the last war. The Russians estimate that if the Nazis continue looting and wrecking in their customary way, they might owe something around 500 billion dollars by the end of this war.

In 1919 the Allies insisted on money payments. Germany wanted to pay in goods, but the Allies balked because goods coming in from Germany's cheap labor markets would compete with their own products.

But the Germans couldn't pay in cash unless they sold more abroad than they bought abroad.

This led to some acrobatics. The Allies lent Germany the money to pay reparations, but she ended up by paying back considerably less than the loan.

Agree on Russia

This, it is suggested, may be one reason why Allied statesmen today say nothing about reparations. Another may be that reparations is still a prime subject for German propagandists seeking to hold the German people together under Nazi leadership.

British, Russian and American economists who have written on reparations agree that Russia's socialistic economic system can absorb reparations practically in any form without being upset.

Not so the democracies, whose competitive commodity and labor markets both would be affected by influx of goods to pay reparations.

Most explicit proposals have come from the Russians, chiefly from Prof. Eugene Varga, who writes for the Soviet publication, War and the Working Class.

Varga said that Germany cannot hope to pay any appreciable part of her reparations from either her investments abroad or her national wealth, though these may help.

He suggested, therefore, that the chief source of payment should be postwar German production.

Basis for Payments

He figured that since Germany spent about four billion dollars a year before the war to rearm, she could reasonably furnish that much annually in reparations in goods.

He expressed belief that priorities should go to those nations which have suffered the most damage in relation to their national wealth, and added:

"It would be both just and practically expedient to requisition labor power from Germany and from the countries allied to Hitler for the postwar rehabilitation of devastated regions."

This was interpreted widely outside Russia as a Soviet bid for German "slave labor" after the war.

At this point, the British New Statesman and Nation pointed out that slave labor is never efficient, and that the Russians are likely to need teams of skilled engineers and technicians rather than gangs of unskilled workers, to rebuild Russia's ruined industries and cities.

A British View

The British journal further suggested that Germany may have much unemployment after the war, with a surplus of skilled labor which might rightly be used to help Russia. But it would let revived German trade unions run the show, under supervision of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

"If reparations there must be, let them be confined in assessment to the restitution of deliberate loot and damage, in collection to what can be paid in goods and labor, and in duration to five years."

But if Germany is to pay in goods she must be able to manufacture them, and this would mean she would continue to operate a big industrial system, some quarters object, fearing Germany would turn it to war again.

This objection might be overcome by controlling the supply of essential minerals, say experts of the Brookings Institution in Washington in a recent book called "World Minerals and World Peace."

PRISONER OF WAR CAMP IN U. S. WHERE SWISS KEEP UP INMATES' CONTACT WITH HOME

Switzerland Becomes War Prisoners' Friend

Thousands of Citizens in Little Republic Volunteer Time to Clear Gifts and Letters

By CHRISTINE SADLER

Several thousand books from Germany arrived in Washington recently—new textbooks on such subjects as electricity, engineering and mechanics. With them came sheets of music and some fine prints of art subjects ranging from flower studies to majestic mountain scenery. All were addressed to Mr. Marc Peter, delegate of the International Committee of the Red Cross, 1645 Connecticut ave.

Needing volunteers to help handle the cargo, a staff member asked the local papers to run a short announcement. Scores of Washington women responded, but—believe it or not—when some few of them learned they were to help fix up packages for German prisoners of war they declined!

Evidently they were unaware that German women might at the same time be repackaging and helping label packages sent from this country to young Americans who are prisoners of war—and that without the International Committee of the Red Cross no communication between soldiers and their families would be possible.

Not generally known, despite its long and glorious history, is that the International Committee is wholly a Swiss organization, now operating in 47 countries, and supported 70 per cent by Swiss funds. It's the only truly international body functioning in the world today and the greatest monument to the active neutrality of Switzerland, the magnificent little democracy that works day and night to keep a spark of decency alive around the war-torn globe.

Switzerland's Role

Switzerland has mobilized for neutrality in this war with a completeness that makes the home-front effort of America seem a half-hearted gesture. Every man and every woman is subject to call, and have been since the war began. Diplomatically, it is looking after the affairs of 27 countries—including the German and Italian interests in this country, the British and American interests in most of the countries with which we are at war. Fighting countries call their diplomats home when war begins, but Switzerland starts expanding. Dr. Charles Bruggmann, who succeeded Marc Peter as Minister to the United States, has a legation staff of approximately 70—all working as nobody had to work in peacetime. The ICRC staff, housed separately from the legation, numbers 14.

To the committtee's headquarters daily come at least 100 letters from soldiers in American prison camps, and out from it regularly go staff members who inspect the camps in accordance with provisions of the Geneva Convention of 1929. Typical of the letters was one last week from a young German lieutenant who had heard his brother also was a prisoner in America and wished to be put in communication with him. It took Alfred Cardinaux less than five minutes to check with the War Department and have an answer.

Specific Books Asked

Many of the letters ask for specific books, which request is submitted to the German Red Cross. Others express the desire of soldiers to be married by proxy, to sweethearts back in Germany, which is another service for which the committee acts as intermediary. At the same time, it should be remembered, the committee's delegate in Germany is receiving requests that will be submitted to the American Red Cross and is inspecting the camps in which Americans are prisoners.

Cardinaux shied from a discussion of Italian prisoners in this country, since their position is now a "peculiar" one — to say the least —but the Italians received no Christmas boxes such as came from Germany, each containing a sprig from a real German Christmas tree and also cigarettes, cookies, chocolate, sardines, a cake, a shaving mirror, and other remembrances. The Italian Red Cross, buffeted by war, has ceased to function—at least temporarily.

The Italians were not nearly so interested in getting vocational training books as the Germans, who have classes going in all the camps, but have been just as eager to work. The committee has constantly urged jobs for the prisoners—as an aid to their morale and physical well being—and is happy this country has decided to use them in large numbers in the forests of the West.

Most of the committee's work, of course, is done at Geneva headquarters—where 15 million cards are on file with the names of prisoners of war and civilian internees and where 3500 Swiss are busy transmitting information and food parcels. Two-thirds of the workers serve without pay, hundreds of them working at odd hours and in addition to their other full-time jobs.

10,000,000 Messages

More than 10 million messages to prisoners have been sent through the committee, which in all has handled more than 50 million pieces of mail in addition to from 700,000 to 800,000 food parcels each month. A Swiss boat left this country in December carrying 1,250,000 food parcels for prisoners in Europe. Another will be arriving soon bringing a new uniform for each German prisoner over here.

As soon as war conditions permit, the committee in Geneva will start an index file for the European civilians displaced by the war.

The number of these displaced persons has been "guessed at" as probably 23 million. Without the committee, their chances of ever rejoining the scattered members of their families would be practically nil. With all of them registered alphabetically and thousands of Swiss working to match up the cards and communications, their chances are pretty good. The committee will go to any amount of trouble to learn what happened to any individual and does a great amount of information clearance between civilians even in wartime, working on cases that often would stump the best detectives.

Why, one might ask? Why does a small country half the size of Maine and with a population of slightly more than 4,000,000 go to so much trouble for others? What motivates a country which has had 650 years of liberty and peace so that it springs to action when others are suffering?

Another Possibility

Surely it would be easier for Switzerland, surrounded by German-held territory, to sit the war out, trade only with Germany and wait for the peace.

But since 1863, when the Red Cross was conceived by Henri Dunant following the Battle of Solferino, the Swiss have been as devoted to humanity as to their own neutrality—and both have been active and constructive devotions, not something left to chance nor carried forward by lukewarm gestures. They believe in humanity, whatever language it speaks, and they know from their own expriences that a country can live democratically and without war.

If any country has had the right to consider itself a have-not nation, it has been Switzerland. It has not enough tillable land to support its people agriculturally and it has no coal and iron for its industries. Yet it became the fourth wealthiest country in Europe, on a per capita basis, its textiles and chemicals and fine machinery unexcelled by others, its people probably the best fed of all—and certainly the best governed.

Dr. Bruggman returned to Switzerland for almost two months this summer. "Our scenery is as beautiful as ever," he said last week, "but one cannot eat scenery."

Rationing Strict

The Swiss have been on very strict rations since 1940. They have had to kill great quantities of their livestock, because three-fourths of their cereals had to be imported and because grazing land was needed for food that would give a harvest return more quickly. Their coal for heating is at less than a fourth of prewar years, and it all must come from Germany. Their cost of living has gone up 50 per cent, despite close controls, and the purchasing power of the middleclass has diminished considerably.

Always prepared to fight, if invaded, Switzerland really faced the prospect of an invasion during this war. Only the quick collapse of France and the need of Germany and Italy for use of Swiss transportation tunnels—which the Swiss would have blown up—saved her neutrality. She mobilized an army that at one time contained a half million men, and spent millions on new fortifications. She purchased a merchant marine for her trade, and her few ships—augmented by a few others from other neutrals—became the only ones that could sail the seas unmolsted to carry on an exchange in prisoners and carry out other humanitarian missions.

Haven for Refugees

As always, she became a heaven for refugees. Dr. Bruggman estimates at least 65,000 persons have sought refuge there during this war. They have included much of the Polish army, thousands of French soldiers, and recently thousands of Italian soldiers. In accordance with the Geneva Convention these soldiers were disarmed and lodged under supervision. All these in addition to civilians from every European country and thousands of children who during the first years of the war were brought in starving, fed in Swiss families and returned to their parents.

When the children could no longer be brought into Switzerland, the Swiss went to them. Members of the International Committee of the Red Cross have run canteens for them in France, in Greece, and in other countries—giving all the help they were permitted to give in wartime and preparing for the day when more could be done.

When peace comes, Switzerland will again bind up the wounds. Others will be helping, but the Swiss as usual will be in the lead, living up to its tradition as the good Samaritan among nations.

CAPTURED AMERICAN AIRMEN AT A GERMAN PRISON CAMP

Robert Albright's Gallery Glimpses

A Marine Is Back of Renegotiation

Back in World War I, Marine Pvt. Francis Case, salary $1 a day, passed a plant where he might have held a job paying $18 a day.

When the war was over, Private Case did a lot of thinking about it. He studied up on corporation war profits and learned that the war had produced, besides countless casualties, 23,000 millionaires.

Somehow there seemed something quite wrong with a policy that would enable some men to make abnormal profits out of war while other men offered their lives.

He resolved that if war ever came again, and he had anything to say about it, war profiteering would never be repeated.

An Amendment Sticks

On a day in March, nearly two years ago, World War I Private Case had something to say about the profits in World War II.

He was then—and is now—Representative Francis Case (Republican) of South Dakota, a baldish, wiry little man on the weather side of 40 who was forever popping up in the House with amendments. No appropriation bill was complete without a Case amendment. More often than not, they were defeated.

But on that twenty-eighth day of March, 1942, Representative Case had an amendment that stuck. It was the first legislative provision for renegotiation of war contracts and its initial target was the 19 billion dollar sixth supplemental appropriation bill of 1942.

First time, up, the amendment was knocked out on a point of order: "Under the guise of a limitation the amendment would require executive action."

Case promptly offered his amendment in another form.

A division vote was demanded. The amendment was adopted, 70 to 8. Renegotiation was born.

Only a Germ

It was only the germ notion of the basic renegotiations statute that was later expanded by Senator Kenneth McKellar and the Senate Appropriations Committee. It wasn't much but an idea to start with and the Senate had to do a thorough job of overhauling.

But it said plainly for the first time that none of the money appropriated should be available to make final payment and settle war contracts until the contractor had filed a certificate of costs with a satisfactory renegotiation agreement.

From it was to stem a law that already has saved the Government more than five billion dollars on war contracts.

And out of it was to grow one of the five "win the war" points stressed by the President in his last message on the state of the Union.

Many times since the spring of 1942 the expanded statute has been under attack. On such occasions watchful Francis Case would generally take the House floor with a warning:

"Be careful what you do to renegotiation!"

Last week the law passed its severest crisis in the Senate. When the Finance Committee reconsidered amendments drastically limiting the renegotiation field, Congressman Case, watching helplessly now on the House sidelines, could afford to relax. Once again he could shake hands with Marine Private Case.

Case Tells His Story

Let Mr. Case tell how his World War I dream became a law effectively curbing run-away war profits:

"In February, 1941, the Supreme Court had handed down a decision in the old Bethlehem Shipbuilding case, a case that grew out of World War I. The court said that if a contract was closed and final settlement made, the Government could not recover even though unconscionable profits had been made. The Government lost its suit to recover.

"We were then in the midst of the new preparedness program. Reports of huge profits were coming in.

"The representative of one shipbuilding company was quoted publicly as saying that his company's profits were so large you couldn't handle them with a steam shovel.

"The (House) Naval Affairs Committee and the (Senate) Truman Committee were bringing to light case after case of exorbitant profits.

"We were in the midst of the building and arming program. Many projects had to be started with letters of intent. You will remember the fight over the cost-plus idea. You will recall the War and Navy developed the idea of the cost-plus-fixed-fee contract, but that in spite of it the huge-profit stories kept coming in."

Case told the House Ways and Means Committee he didn't know whether the renegotiation idea "was constitutional or not." But if Congress could change a contract affecting human lives (Selective Service) he said he thought it could modify a contract affecting property.

"I am not a lawyer," he said. "But it did not seem to me we should pass the sixth supplemental bill adding 19 billion dollars to the billions already appropriated and not try to do something about that situation. . . .

"We knew that hundreds of contracts were outstanding and that on some of them excessive profits were being made. We knew that funds in the supplemental bill, merged with previously appropriated money, would be used to make final payments on many of those contracts.

"Under the Bethlehem decision, if the contracts were once settled the door would be closed to any price adjustment.

"So I just tried to stick my foot in the door."

Now, Case is a little guy, but he has a big foot. It's still in the door.

Mother Cabrini, First U. S. Saint, to Be Canonized

By Carroll Arimond

Chicago, Jan. 22 (AP).—An American citizen who ministered to persons still living will take her place this month with Peter, Paul, Patrick, Francis of Assisi and other Saints of the Catholic Church—a hallowed soul singled out for special veneration by the faithful.

She is Blessd Mother Frances Xavier Cabrini, a slight, fair-complexioned Italian nun. While no official confirmation has been received, dispatches from Berne, Switzerland, report that Pope Pius will officiate at canonization ceremonies in Vatican City sometime in January.

Rejected by one religious order because she was too frail, Mother Cabrini founded her own, the Institute of the Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and established a school, a hospital or an orphange for each of the 67 years of her life. She crossed the Atlantic 23 times, went up and down the Pacific several times, rode burro-back over mountains and criss-crossed the United States.

Died 27 Years Ago

Besides being the first American citizen to be canonized, Mother Cabrini will have the distinction of being sainted only 27 years after her death December 22, 1917, the shortest intervening period since papal courts have adjudged those worthy of sanctification.

An ecclesiastical court of inquiry sat in Chicago in 1933, and took voluminous testimony, both in support and in challenge of the miracles attributed to Mother Cabrini. After a study of the transcript and documents, the Sacred Congregation of Rites in Rome decreed that Mother Cabrini possessed the necessary virtues in an heroic degree and, was responsible for two genuine miracles, sufficient proof of her sanctity. The cases of Peter Smith and Sister Delfina Grazioli, as reported by the court are, in substance, as follows:

Peter Smith, now 22, and serving in the Army, was the unfortunate victim of an accident on the day of his birth in New York. Under the law, the eyes of new-born infants are bathed with a mild solution of silver nitrate as a precaution against gonorrheal ophthalmia. Through error, Peter's eyes were washed with a 50 per cent, instead of a 1 per cent, solution.

The region about his eyes turned black. The acid burned the cornea, ran into the nasal passages and inflamed the infant's lungs. His temperature climbed to 109. An eye specialist pronounced the case incurable and three attending physicians concurred, hoping at best to save his life, much less his sight.

To Peter's tiny nightgown, however, Mother Charles, the hospital director, pinned a relic of Mother Cabrini, and with the other sisters of the hospital prayed all night. By morning Peter's temperature was normal and he was breathing properly. Within 24 hours, the black scars faded to red traces and disappeared entirely within the next day.

Peter Smith appeared as a witness in the Chicago inquiry. He is fond of reading, is an excellent swimmer and took to wearing spectacles only recently because of the strain of study.

Appears in Vision

Four years later, Sister Delfina, a member of Mother Cabrini's order, was in the sisters' hospital in Seattle, Wash. Her affliction had been diagnosed as cancer of the stomach and several operations had been unsuccessful. The doctors gave up hope and the chaplain administered Extreme Unction, the sacrament of the dying.

Shortly afterward, she later related, Mother Cabrini appeared in a vision to Sister Delfina and told her to eat some dinner. The nurse, advised of this, informed her superiors, who decided to see whether it was possible for Sister Delfina to eat.

The nun had her dinner and began to recover. The cause of her illness disappeared as far as the doctors could determine. Eight years later she was in Chicago, testifying to her recovery before the ecclesiastical investigators.

The first institution founded by Mother Cabrini was a school in Codogna, Italy, in 1880. Her first American project was an orphanage and school established in New York City in 1889, the year of her arrival. Once she recognized that the United States would share the bulk of her far-flung activities, she became a naturalized citizen.

Among the cities where she built schools, hospitals and orphanages for her order of nuns to carry on her work are Chicago, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver, Newark, N. J., Scranton, Pa.; Rome, Genoa, Milan, London, Paris, Madrid, Rio de Janeiro, San Paolo, Buenos Aires and Granada, Nicaragua.

When Pacifists Decide to Fight

By ROBERT T. OLIVER

A fact that must never cease to amaze the Axis propagandists is the fighting ability of American and British "degenerate," peace-loving youth. The paradox of boys who hate war so bitterly they fight their hardest to get it over with would seem to be a puzzle the totalitarian militarists cannot understand.

PEACE PLEDGE

Across the narrow strip of the English Channel and the wide reaches of the Pacific Ocean are lined up armies of diametrically opposite training and background. In this contrast is most sharply emphasized the nature of the cause for which we fight.

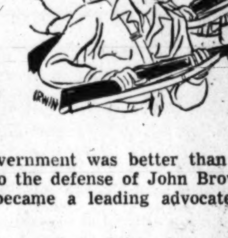
While Hitler, Mussolini, and the warlords of Japan were loudly teaching the glories and virtues of war, our youth were organizing peace demonstrations and mockingly joining the "Veterans of Future Wars."

While the people of the dictatorships were prepared to accept war as the normal way of life, the democratic peoples were convinced that the only tolerable life was one of peace. Our men want desperately to get the disagreeable job over with and return to the life they infinitely prefer.

Nothing New in Our History

Startling as is this outgrowth of peace sentiments to Axis minds, it is no surprise to students of American history. We have seen the same thing occur again and again.

Abraham Lincoln, during his term in Congress, spoke out strongly against our war with Mexico, yet a few years later he was holding the course of our Nation steady and our will strong through the most tragic war in our history.



George Washington longed for nothing so much as the peace and quiet of his Mount Vernon estate, yet he led our forces through eight years of war.

Woodrow Wilson did everything in his power to keep this Nation at peace, then mobilized and led the greatest war effort we had made up to that time.

And the same metamorphosis has been observed over and over again among our leading pacifists.

Henry David Thoreau wrote an eloquent anarchist essay, "The Necessity of Civil Disobedience," to urge that revolt against the government was better than to bear arms in its defense. Yet he flew to the defense of John Brown after the raid on Harpers Ferry, and became a leading advocate of the Civil War.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, America's greatest philosopher, taught the spiritual union of all men through the Over-soul, yet he too advocated the bearing of arms to hold the Union together. Walt Whitman, the poet of peace and universal brotherhood, could not indorse the inevitable slaughter of war, yet when Lincoln rallied the North to hold the Nation together, Whitman gave himself completely to tending the sick and wounded in the hospitals until the war was over.

Many Other Examples May Be Cited

John Greenleaf Whittier, the Quaker poet, opposed war with every resource of his inspired pen, but when war came, he supported it just as vigorously. Indeed one of the most moving utterances of the Civil War were the lines from Whittier's "Barbara Frietchie" describing the devotion of the helpless old woman to her country's cause.

Examples of a like sort are numerous. Robert E. Lee, the soldier who did all in his power to avoid war, responded to his State's call to lead its armies through four years of bitter fighting. Herman Melville, the author of "Moby Dick," satirized war, yet celebrated the heroism of his countrymen when war came.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and James Russell Lowell were others who bent every energy to denouncing war before it broke out, and to supporting it afterward. William James was the leading peace advocate in the years before the World War; and his brother Henry James renounced his American citizenship in 1916 because the United States had not yet joined the Allies in the struggle against Germany.

It is no accident that Oliver Cromwell observed that Christians make the best fighters. It takes a deep-seated faith to carry the soldiers through the horrors of the battlefield. "There are no atheists in fox holes," as many front-line observers have pointed out. Many a chaplain who plunges into battlelines with his men today was preaching the virtues of peace from his pulpit yesterday. And he will be again tomorrow. Now his only thought is to make that tomorrow come as quickly as it may.

'Supermen' Have Handicap

"Supermen" believing in their own superiority never have fought as well as "fellow men" seeking to maintain their heritage of freedom and equality. Long before the days of one-worldliness into which we are now entering, Herman Melville sensed this truth when he wrote:

"We are not a narrow tribe of men . . . maintaining an exclusive succession among ourselves. No: Our blood is as the flood of the Amazon, made up of a thousand noble currents all pouring into one. We are not a nation so much as a world."

When this sense of world fellowship is aroused to defend itself, history bears witness to its irresistible strength. This is the lesson we have learned again on the battle fronts of East and West.

Rightists Have Lost Ground In Europe's Recent Wars

By W. G. ROGERS

Associated Press Feature Writer

Her history is a record of conservative governments giving way to something less conservative, liberal governments to something more liberal. The new leftish rule may not last, but it usually is established at least for a while.

The same national instability is reappearing in this war.

It is reflected in the rivalry of Tito and Mihailovic in Yugoslavia; De Gaulle and the predecessors of Giraud in French North Africa; and the liberal forces and King Victor Emmanuel and Badoglio in Italy.

Russia is the most notable example of radicals stepping into conservatives' shoes, for it switched from Czardom to Communism almost overnight. There was also the bloody Commune in Paris after the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71.

In Germany after the last war the Weimar republic had a difficult time getting on its feet. Both Silesia and Bavaria had Bolshevist or Soviet governments for a while. Spartacists under Socialist Leaders Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht fought with considerable success against Ebert in Berlin and other cities contending for the right to rule the Reich roost.

Bismarck's victory at Sedan meant Napoleon's abdication, and left wing groups in Paris set up a Commune on March 18, 1871, that lasted more than two months.

Crowns fell on all sides after the last war: Wilhelm, Nicholas and Charles were among the victims.

Austria-Hungary as dual monarchy was dissolved on October 16, 1916. As the Allies swept closer to victory, revolution started November 1. In Hungary a republic was proclaimed on November 16. There was a short-lived Soviet republic under Bela Kun before Horthy took over. An attempt to restore Charles failed.

In Austria the emperor renounced his crown on November 11, 1918, and the republic was born November 12.

As rebellion spread in Russia Nicholas abdicated March 15, 1917. Kerensky formed a provisional government. Bolsheviks seized control November 6 with Lenin as premier and Trotsky as commissar for foreign affairs. The Czar and his family were shot July 16, 1918.

Mum's The Word

We take this means of informing our readers that we shall be unable to give them (in advance at any rate) the complete and detailed plans for the coming Allied invasion of the continent of Europe. It will be wholly useless to write or telephone us for information as to the exact point at which the continent will be stormed, the exact hour at which the invasion will occur, or even the size and identity of the naval and military forces to be engaged. We have just been warned by Mr. Byron Price, director of the censorship, that to divulge such information would not be in the best of taste, nor according to the highest ethical standards of modern journalism, and might, moreover, be of some value or interest to the enemy.

"No American newspaperman or broadcaster," says Mr. Price, "will want the distinction of being the first to disclose where, when and how our troops will strike. But no one should forget for a moment that inadvertent disclosures are exactly as valuable to the enemy as deliberate disclosures . . . All speculation about the invasion should be kept strictly within the limit laid down in the codes and no device of speculation or prediction used to disclose restricted information . . . Opinion on these subjects should be labeled as opinion and no attempt to set forth actual expectations of the high command should be made (except in case of formal official announcement) without prior reference to this office . . . We need urgently a complete moratorium on backstairs gossip and hairline authenticity regarding this critical battle."

Only a few months ago there seemed to be ample official encouragement to speculation. It was felt to be helpful in the war of nerves. The injunction of Mr. Price may mean that we are all set to go. (Please note, this is a matter of pure opinion.) We hope so, though the reported transfer of German divisions from western to eastern Europe doesn't seem to show that the Germans think so.

Case Against Confusion

A truly constructive suggestion has come out of the meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor at Miami. John P. Frey, president of the AFL's metal trades department, urged his colleagues to seek the creation of a central Government agency to coordinate the numerous units now regulating wages and conditions of employment. Twenty-five Federal agencies, Mr. Frey says, are dealing with labor matters. Frequently they work at cross purposes and thus leave Administration policy in a state of confusion. That condition would never have arisen if labor agencies had been given a place within the Department of Labor at the time of their creation.

We think that Mr. Frey's proposal comes with particular force at the time when finis is being written on the railway labor dispute. From the viewpoint of labor, Government and the public this controversy was shamefully bungled. In the end it turned out to be not an industry-labor dispute, but a tangled row between the brotherhoods and various governmental agencies working at cross-purposes. And the net result was more inflationary than the original settlement worked out in accord with the Railway Labor Act. Labor certainly has a right to ask that its appeals for adjustment to wartime conditions be handled with more promptness and order than was manifested in this case. And there is not much prospect of ending the pulling and hauling among the numerous agencies dealing with labor disputes and manpower supply unless they are brought together under one top policy-maker. We realize that this cannot be accomplished on a moment's notice, but it is certainly an objective to be sought as soon as an orderly reorganization can be effected.

Mr. Frey's proposal stands out in sharp contrast to that of William Green, president of the AFL. Mr. Green is asking that the "total independence" of the War Labor Board be restored. Apparently he is willing to close his eyes to the national problem of inflation for the sake of securing easier wage boosts. This appears to be so completely out of line with the national interest that it is certain to fall upon unreceptive ears at both the White House and Capitol.

The time when any group could make an impressive case for special favors has long since passed. What is most urgently needed now is a merger of group interests with the national interest. Labor makes a strong argument when it asks for systematic integration of labor and manpower policies with national policy—when it seeks to avoid delay and confusion. But the reform certainly must come in the form of further integration and not in the granting of any possible avenues of escape from the stabilization program for specially favored groups.

Study Of Congress

Congress has reacted very slowly to the efforts to modernize its machinery and reorient it in our present system of big government. All the outstanding reforms suggested by members and critics of Congress are yet to be accomplished. Yet the American Political Science Association's Committee on Congress believes that changes are on the way. In its third progress report the committee points out that modernization of Congress is now a topic of widespread discussion. There is a growing awareness that Congress will have to improve its methods of operation if it is to remain a great democratic legislature in the complicated postwar era. "Its ability to play its role successfully," as the committee points out, "will depend upon its willingness to appraise and modify not merely its internal machinery, methods, and customs, but the whole question of its place in our scheme of government, including its relations with the Executive, on the one hand, and with the people, on the other."

The committee visualizes Congress declining in public esteem and leadership if it attempts to carry its colossal burden of work without modernizing its machinery. That could mean only further shifting of responsibility and power to the President. Even if Congress goes halfway with the reformers, it will have a difficult time arresting the decline of its powers. Mr. George B. Galloway and his fellow explorers in the wilderness of congressional custom, tradition, seniority and habit do not want to stop at the halfway mark. They are urging Congress to reappraise the whole problem of a representative legislature "in an era of wide and expanding Federal powers."

What the experts seem to be saying is that Congress will have to modernize its own machinery or surrender more of its policy-making functions to the bureaucrats. Now that is precisely what Congress wishes to avoid. So it should have the greatest possible interest in strengthening its own ability to act in the public interest. A few alert members are working persistently toward this end, among them Representatives Dirksen, Kefauver and Monroney, Senators La Follette, Maloney and others. Some of them have proposed admirable specific reforms, such as a question period in the House for the heads of executive departments and the development of congressional research staffs. But by all odds the most hopeful measure on this subject is the Maloney-Monroney resolution to create a joint committee on ways and means of improving the organization and effectiveness of Congress.

In fairness to itself, we believe, Congress should hasten to get this study under way. The country cannot be saved from the extremes of bureaucracy merely by hampering the President. Nor can it substitute positive and constructive policies for the present planless muddling on the domestic front unless Congress itself is organized to function as a modern, responsible policy-making body. We think it is time for Congress to take a long and critical look at itself, and the best possible beginning would be the designation of a handful of its most alert and forward-looking members to launch such a study.

Renegotiation

The Senate Finance Committee deserves commendation for its second thoughts on the contract renegotiation law. It has now repaired the most serious breaches in that law which it had contemplated recommending to the Senate. To have exempted standard commercial articles and a wide range of subcontracts, as the committee had earlier proposed, would have been to make renegotiation a mere empty ritual. The law is designed to effect fair pricing of all the material purchased for our armed forces. This means that the profits gleaned by contractors must be kept at a reasonable level whether they come from special war articles or from peacetime products needed in war. Renegotiation is no reflection on a contractor's patriotism or integrity. It is simply a recognition of the fact that production costs are not always predictable for war orders in huge volume and therefore need to be reassessed in the light of experience. Most contractors welcome the procedure.

In its new report, the Finance Committee has modified its earlier proposal that any contractor dissatisfied with the results of renegotiation could appeal to the courts for a de novo trial of his claims. Now the committee recommends that this right be granted only to contractors on whom the War Contract Renegotiation Board imposes a settlement unilaterally. Undoubtedly this is an improvement. Cases of this character have been rare. There is a danger, however, that it invites a refusal on the part of contractors to accept settlements proposed by the board. By refusing, they can hope for a more favorable adjustment in the courts. If the practice becomes prevalent, the courts will be clogged with litigation for years to come.

Courts of law, moreover, are ill-equipped to determine the equities of such disputes. They have neither rules nor precedents to guide them in evaluating fair profits. It is their proper function in matters of this sort to see to it that administrative agencies exercise their authority reasonably and in conformity with the intent of Congress. This function is distorted when they are asked to pass upon questions of fact in spheres with which they are wholly unfamiliar. Contract renegotiation, like labor relations, is such a sphere. Aggrieved parties should be, and indeed are, free to appeal to the courts against arbitrary or irresponsible rulings. But the courts should not be burdened with the weighing of evidence and of values in a de novo trial. That way lies frustration.

Mr. Stimson's Plea

One of the chief arguments against a national service law is that a shortage of labor no longer exists. The implication is that we can sustain our war output without any compulsion. The argument was effectively rebutted by Secretary Stimson on Wednesday before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. As Mr. Stimson explained it, the problem in so far as it relates to labor is not one of over-all shortage. It is a combination of two factors: the unevenness of the distribution of our labor and the heavy turnover of labor. A national service law would put an end to the troubles which have arisen on both accounts.

These troubles are major impediments to that mobilization of our resources to which we are pledged in justice to the fighting front. Turnover is heavy, particularly in our aircraft factories. This is not only a shocking waste of manpower, but, as Secretary Stimson said, "it stands as a constant threat to maximum production of the implements of war." Just as serious a menace is the unevenness in labor distribution. This is producing shortages in some of our most vital weapons when there is excess of labor available in other neighboring States. Secretary Stimson gave examples. One was that while there is an excess of labor for the production of machine guns, tanks and ships in some places, in nearby places there is a shortage in the vital production of aircraft engines and landing craft.

Clearly such a situation is unfair to ourselves as a Nation, and it leaves a grave sense of injustice among our servicemen. Consider, for example, what has been occasioned by our lack of comprehensive organization of the home front. The Army has been called upon to furlough soldiers so that they may take the place of workers or miners who have left their jobs in order to do something which they think will offer them better pay. That happened in the copper mines of Montana as well as in the airplane factories of California. Organization under national service would have saved a waste which at the same time was a disgrace. We hope the Military Affairs Committee was as impressed with Secretary Stimson's evidence as we were. Seldom has he been more in earnest. And the country at large knows that no man in our public life weighs his words more carefully than Secretary Stimson.

Transit Accidents

The loss of 35 lives in streetcar and bus accidents last year is ample cause for the investigation that the Public Utilities Commission has ordered beginning February 1. Injuries on the public transit system slightly declined in 1943, but they were still abnormally high—the total was 2185—even for wartime. It is well to remember, as Commissioner Hankin points out, that in addition to the suffering and loss of life caused by these accidents, they cost the public in payments for injuries and damages $1,113,700.

Even though the transit company can buy and operate only equipment approved by the PUC, and PUC investigators of accidents appear to have found no unsafe equipment in use, it is well to have the sufficiency of safety appliances thoroughly investigated. Probably the greatest improvement can be made, however, in the hiring and training of men and women who operate public conveyances. Undoubtedly the heavy turnover of operators due to the war has been a large factor in the rise of fatal accidents. The third point to be investigated under the order submitted by Mr. Hankin and approved by the PUC is "what proportion, if any, of the expense incurred annually for injuries and damages is due to the fault of the company itself in failing to adopt sufficient measures toward prevention of such accidents . . ."

If it can be shown that company negligence is responsible for accidents, the payment of damages in those cases certainly ought not to be charged to the public in the fixing of rates. But the PUC has more effective means of dealing with the accident problem, and we don't expect that any one of its members is going to be content with assessing the cost of accident damages against company profits if any evidence of negligence on the part of the company is found.

Eternal sapling, wild with wind,
What seed, outraged in April night,
Thrust frantic fingers in this earth,
Impelled these heedless leaves to light?
The pine was planted with a hand
That gauged its growth in drought and flood,
Whose own strength swelled the upward trunk,
Whose beauty fed the outward bud.
One soil, but individual growth:
The pine pricks higher into June.
The cottonwood, with water sound,
Throws deeper shade on every noon.
And when the winter covers them,
Above the mound will yet be seen
Bare boughs of the deciduous heart
Beside the mind's bright evergreen.

America At War

Soldier Vote

THE OUTCOME of the present controversy over votes for servicemen in the 1944 election will be judged by the public not on the basis of legal issues, but whether the mechanism finally chosen by Congress really reaches the men overseas—regardless of which States they come from.

A poll of public opinion released this week by the National Opinion Research Center at Denver University indicates that the American people feel strongly on this point. Unless a simple and workable method is adopted, Congress will earn the criticisms of the voters at home this fall, to say nothing of the wrath of the servicemen when they return.

Of every 100 persons asked by the NORC whether "men and women over 21 in the armed forces outside of this country should be able to vote in the presidential election next November," 92 said "yes," 5 "no," and only 3 were undecided.

Excluding the negative replies, four-fifths of the remainder believed that participation in the election could be made possible for most men in the armed forces overseas and on ships. Asked whether the Federal or State governments should be in charge of the voting arrangements, well over two-thirds of those with opinions voted for Federal control. As one executive put it, "the Federal Government has the facilities for unifying it. Otherwise there would be 48 different ways of handling it."

Barring Negroes

A majority also expressed opposition to barring Negroes in the services from voting. Of every 100 asked whether Negroes over 21 in the armed forces should be allowed to vote, 77 answered "yes" without qualification. A packing house clerk in Chicago said, "Yes. Some people are prejudiced, but if a man is good enough to fight for his country, he should be allowed to vote."

Only 12 per cent of those questioned were opposed to votes for Negro servicemen, and most of these were in the South. The manager of a chain store in Tennessee opined, "No. The Negro, in my opinion, is not intelligent enough to vote." And a Louisiana cabinet maker simply said, "No! Absolutely not at all!"

Few people thought that the soldier vote would have much influence in either direction. Asked "if soldiers vote in the coming election, do you think it will help one party more than another?" Sixty-four out of 100 said "no," only 21 answered "yes," and 15 were undecided. Of the minority who thought the election results would be influenced, about two-thirds believed the Democrats would have the edge over their opponents.

Political leaders do not agree with the general public on this point. One Democratic spokesman predicted that 7 out of 10 in the armed forces would vote Democratic, while the chairman of the Republican National Committee claimed that his party would get the soldiers' support by a margin of 52 to 44.

Men Overseas

There is no doubt, in any case, that the men overseas would resent mightily any legislation which placed barriers in the way of their voting. The Algiers edition of Stars and Stripes conducted a little poll of its own, among soldiers rom 42 States, and failed to find a single one who did not strongly assert his right to vote.

The editor of the same paper, Master Sergt. David Golding, remarked upon his return to America last week, "The boys up there know they have a right to vote, and if it isn't extended to them they're going to be mad as hell . . . . They expected the Green-Lucas bill to pass, and they were shocked when it didn't. I'd also like to say that no one has any real idea of the political preferences of soldiers and I'm sure that political labels in this election, as far as the men are concerned, won't mean anything."

H. R. Knickerbocker of the Field publications interviewed a smaller number of Americans in Italy, and reported the concensus of opinion as follows: "If President Roosevelt runs for reelection he can't lose; and if Congress fails to give United States soldiers serving abroad the right to vote in the next election, the Congressmen responsible will find sooner or later that they can't win against the votes of servicemen."

A study of the results of last year's election in New York, however, revealed that the absentee soldiers' vote closely paralleled that of the civilians.

Out in New Guinea, our men have seen Australian soldiers casting their votes. They expect to exercise the same right in next fall's election. A quick and efficient solution to the problem of how it is to be done will mean a great deal to their morale. It will give new substance to the democracy they are fighting for.

The Soviet Mystery

By Andre Visson

On The United Nations' Inside Front

IT IS VERY hard to accept the theory circulating in Washington's official and diplomatic circles that the use of Soviet policymakers of Pravda's heavy artillery has been mainly determined by Moscow's desire to express the Soviet resentment over London's willingness to act as mediator in the Soviet-Polish boundary strife.

The partisans of this theory point out that "Pravda's" bombshell, carrying an apparently false Cairo dispatch dated January 12, was shot out on January 17 together with the Tass announcement of the Soviet refusal to discuss any problems with the Polish government-in-exile. They link Pravda's bombshell to another of Pravda's articles, which scolded Wendell Willkie for his nevertheless very friendly analysis of the Soviet-Polish problem.

It is very difficult, however, to understand why Moscow, which offered to the Polish people the settlement of their border problem on the basis of the Curzon line, could be so angered by British willingness to act as mediator. Moscow policy makers have certainly been informed that responsible British circles as early as a year ago envisaged the Curzon line as the best possible solution. If Moscow policy makers were limiting their objectives to the territories east of the Curzon line, there is no reason why they should not have welcomed the British acceptance of the Polish demand for complete mediation. (The American acceptance has been limited to assistance in the resumption of diplomatic relations.)

Soviet Russia

If, on the other hand, we have to admit that Moscow has definitely determined not to recognize the Polish cabinet-in-exile as representative of the Polish people, it is very hard to believe that the British, after the Moscow and Teheran conferences, could have ignored the intransigence of the Soviet attitude on such an important problem.

It has been advanced in Washington diplomatic circles that Soviet Russia has been anxious not only to express her resentment but to make both the British and American public opinion forget the whole Polish issue by dragging out the "red herring" of the alleged Cairo dispatch. It is possible, of course, that—sensitive to the weakening of their moral position as the result of their refusal to enter into discussion, assisted by two big Allies acting as mediators, with the Polish regime-in-exile—Soviet Russia attempted to weaken the moral position of Britain by obliging London to defend itself against charges which, incredible as they appear to be, might be used by those anti-British circles which have as little sympathy for Britain as for Soviet Russia. It is not easy to admit, however, that Soviet policy makers, who up until now have proved to be exceptionally skillful in psychological warfare, have committed such a psychological blunder as the obviously faked news which they purportedly picked up in Cairo from a nonexisting correspondent and which miraculously escaped the vigilant eyes of the British censorship.

Certainly, in the use of their psychological munitions the Soviet experts are greatly handicapped by the fact that they do not have a free press. In a democratic country the press mirrors public opinion as faithfully as possible. In a democratic country it is possible moreover, without committing the administration, to use intentionally the "psychological rifle" of a commentator known rightly or wrongly to express the opinion of some highly placed source, for the purpose of giving an unofficial expression of discontent or warning. The Soviet leaders found themselves reduced to the use of the heavy artillery of their controlled and directed press. They try hard to differentiate between the degree of "authority" of Pravda, the mouthpiece of the Communist Party, and Izvestia, the official organ of the Presidium of the Supreme Council of the USSR. The western mind, however, refuses to accept those differentiations. Controlled and directed, the Soviet press has acquired a very special responsibility which might sometimes be an advantage but which, as far as Soviet Russia's foreign relations are concerned, is undoubtedly a very great liability and handicap.

Frequent Rumors

The Soviet leaders may occasionally regret this fact. They may realize the necessity of having at least one nonauthoritative publication. It is easy to assume that, irritated or angered by frequent rumors circulating in Allied capitals about Soviet Russia's possible or actual peace feelers, they had a strong desire to state that they could suspect their allies of exactly the same possibilities or even intentions. (It is rather interesting that for the time being they have concentrated their "suspicions' offensive" on Britain alone, and have excluded the United States, which, incidentally, has not yet been accused of any "separate peace" possibilities.)

It is certain, however, that Soviet policy makers, despite their anxiety to express their resentment, must have been aware of their limitations and of the damage which their bombshell might cause. On one hand they emphasize the solidarity of the United Nations and on the other hand they gravely compromise it.

What, then, is the real reason for this mystifying inconsistency, the reason for what appears to us to be the greatest of psychological blunders, committed by men who during recent years have established the record of the most skilled psychological warfare experts?

Ingenious Guess

Walter Lippmann has advanced a very ingenious and generous guess. It is indeed quite likely that the Russians are still preoccupied by the menace of the German army and are sincerely afraid of some "carefully laid trap" into which Britain and this country might fall.

On the other hand, if we analyze all the latest moves of the Soviet foreign policy, we discover that it runs along two different lines, which Moscow rulers may hope will some day converge into one. Soviet Russia does not exclude international cooperation and is apparently even eager to assure it. But she is still more anxious to guarantee her security by what she believes to be the "most favorable strategic borders" or more or less camouflaged "zones of influence."

It is very questionable, however, whether these two main objectives of Soviet foreign policy can be coordinated. Certain actions or even methods of Soviet diplomacy may seriously compromise the idea of international cooperation. The Soviet policy makers might be misled by the "realities" of their present power in Eastern Europe. They should have the wisdom to realize that many "political realities" are of a strictly temporary character. "Moral principles" appear to be so frail that anyone can ignore or violate them; but they survive "political realities."

At the Moscow and Teheran conferences the American leaders very frankly and honestly explained how far the public opinion of this country would allow them to go in the way of postwar international collaboration. It would be most discouraging for the future of our civilization if, after having received those explanations, the Soviet rulers came to the conclusion that their "freedom of action" has a greater value for them than the limited international cooperation which Washington and London are able to offer.

Farm Prices

The dairyman with a ceiling price on his milk, cheese or butter is going out of business or fighting for higher ceiling prices, because of the uncontrolled prices at the farm.

To me, the solution of this all can be easily brought about by simply putting a sensible ceiling price on all things at the place of production and to head off all blocs now working for votes through the money grabbing instinct of the voters who elect them.

Eleven million members of the armed forces should not be denied the right of American citizens to vote, by the dilatory actions of groups of people who fail to provide the means of voting. Who is afraid of our votes?

National Service Act

Barely a few months have passed and the "labor draft bill" comes up again—this time asked by the President under a new name—National Service Act.

The various arguments used in defense of the bill run the full gamut of evasions and suppositions that the war will be prolonged without the National Service Act.

The argument being used is "to insure an adequate amount of war production." Without a labor draft, the proponents argue, we cannot hope to produce a requisite quantity of war materials. Thus they wrangle on and on. Let's look at the facts. The production figures show that not only did labor meet the requirements but exceeded them beyond expectation. Reports, official and unofficial, declare that the war industries are over the hump. This is largely due to the astonishing productivity of the workers, which, together with longer hours, according to War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, has added the equivalent of 1,500,000 additional workers. Air manufacturers say their output is steadily rising. One machine-gun manufacturer says his employes have doubled the output per man-hour. Ordnance inventories are growing to "unmanageable proportions." The shipbuilding industries, with plans for increasing production, have put their yards on a six-day-week basis.

The facts destroy the validity of their arguments—facts of which these gentlemen are well aware. Then why the pressure for "labor draft"? Unless they mean to reduce the American worker to the status of a slave, to invalidate the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and thus make of the great "War of Liberation" a mockery.

Check Juvenile Delinquency

Washington seems to be aroused as a community over the problem of juvenile delinquency. There are no born juvenile delinquents: there are only delinquent homes and delinquent communities. A delinquent boy or girl seldom if ever comes from a home and surroundings that afford security, understanding, stability, real guidance and affection.

We cannot say that there will be no delinquent homes. In a free country, little is going to be accomplished by raving and ranting against working mothers, nonchurchgoing families, separated parents! Better housing and a lessening of poverty cannot be achieved overnight.

But we can say there will be no delinquent communities, or specifically, that Washington will not be a delinquent community. I wish to submit the following which would give to each boy and girl the opportunity of developing into a well-rounded citizen:

When the schools close at 3 p. m. or 3:30 p. m., they should have a second staff made up of trained persons who would receive equal salaries, promotions, retirement, etc., to take over. Their working day would begin at 3:30 and end at 10 p. m.

This staff would be under an assistant superintendent of education. They would conduct a work-play center through which the needs of the children would be met insofar as it could be met by the community society. The joint efforts of groups, committees, P-TA, citizens' associations, social workers, and any organizations interested in the wartime and peacetime problems of the child, would be channeled through this branch of our educational system. It would not be a charity, nor sporadic, nor spasmodic, but would function just as the public schools function, and would reach every child in Washington that is reached by the public schools.

In one city where the plan was put into effect, taxes were lowered rather than raised, so efficient did the coordination and unification prove to be. The plan does away with duplication of work by public employes, and makes one building and one piece of ground do the work of two. Schools, playgrounds, community centers are all community property; teachers, recreational instructors, social workers and psychiatrists, who are paid from public funds, are all alike community employes.

The 3-to-10 staff would absorb in great part the present Recreation Department. The latter already makes some use of school buildings for both afternoon and evening programs. The Recreation Department is notoriously understaffed, but because of its high type of personnel does a remarkable job on short pay and long labor. The 3-to-10 staff would absorb all of the present teaching staff whose work was not strictly teaching. At present the schools and overworked teachers with crowded classrooms are expected to do a little bit of everything. Under the new set-up the teacher would be left free to teach.

Just what would be the program from 3 to 10 in an individual school-work-play setup?

First, there would be a continuous, supervised reading and study room (probably the present school library and reference room) for those who wished to read or prepare their homework. Many children lack proper home conditions for study and reading. The few small but attractive branch libraries filled with diligent school children consulting sympathetic literary advisers show what could be done on a scale that would reach all.

Second, every recreational need that could possibly be met would be met. All present available facilities of school gymnasiums, playgrounds and community centers would be adequately staffed and utilized. There would be inside sports: basketball, badminton, table tennis, etc., with bowling alleys and swimming pools added as soon as possible; there would be outside sports: football, basketball, baseball, field hockey, tennis, whatever the season of the year inspired.

Third would be the work projects. Here we think of the victory garden plots which many schools and playgrounds already have, paper and salvage collection under the supervision of this staff rather than the 9-to-3 staff. There would be classes like those now conducted at the playgrounds in basketry and various arts and crafts. There would be sewing, cooking, cabinet work, activities like those now going on at the Settlement Houses.

Fourth would be the meeting of social needs. There would be music, singing, dancing, teen-age canteens, dramatics, orchestra, hobby clubs, clubs of Scouts, Brownies, Campfire Girls, fraternities, sororities, all gang activities that adolescents thrive on. There would be rooms for the meetings of Parent-Teacher Associations, neighborhood councils, community groups of all kinds. School dances, plays, track meets, exhibitions would be the work of the 3-to-10 staff.

Mustering-Out Pay for Servicemen Is Favored By Overwhelming Vote in National Gallup Poll

By George Gallup

The movement in Congress to provide mustering-out pay for discharged veterans of World War II has the overwhelming support of the voters.

The provisions of the bill which was adopted by the Senate and sent to the House meet with the approval of the public, and the great majority of Americans are willing to pay higher taxes to make these payments possible.

This is indicated in a coast-to-coast survey by the institute. The public's willingness to grant bounty pay to servicemen contrasts sharply with its attitude toward the cashing of the soldiers' bonus certificates in 1935 by veterans of World War I. At that time a survey found nearly as many voters opposed to the bonus as in favor of it.

National opinion today was sounded both on the general principle of mustering-out pay and on the specific sums provided in the Senate bill. The House measure, being debated this week, would provide somewhat smaller sums.

The first question in the survey dealt with the general issue as follows:

"A bill in Congress provides that members of the armed forces be given a certain sum of money by the Government when they leave the service. Do you approve or disapprove of this idea?

The vote is:

Approve	88%
Disapprove	8
Undecided	4

Voters were then handed a card listing the various sums called for in the Senate bill. Servicemen who have served on duty outside the United States would receive $500 for 18 months or more, $400 for 12 to 18 months, and $300 for less than 12 months service. Those who have served only in the United States would be paid $300 for 12 months or more, and $200 for less than 12 months.

Voters were asked:

"Do you think these amounts are too large, too small, or about right?"

The replies show that the great majority consider these sums either about right or too small, while comparatively few think they are too large.

Too small	11%
About right........	64
Qualified approval..	7
Too large..........	3
Oppose any payment	8
Undecided	7

The heading "qualified approval" includes those who thought there ought to be greater difference in payment between men who had seen combat and men who had not, and between those serving abroad and those at home.

Each voter was then asked how he felt about digging into his pocket for the taxes needed to make the muster-out payments.

"Would you, personally, be willing to pay higher taxes in order to make these payments possible?"

The results:

Yes	70%
No	20
Undecid d	10.

While favoring muster-out pay after this war, the public is at the same time anxious to have some kind of system for gradual demobilization of our forces. There is considerable fear that servicemen will have difficulty finding jobs. One-half of all voters questioned in an institute survey last June said they thought the men should be kept in service until they have definite jobs lined up.

Common Cold Still 'Tricky,' Despite Sulfas

By Howard W. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Editor

New York, Jan. 22.—I am a cold-susceptible person, and have not had a cold for more than three years. I used a sulfa spray or nose drops.

One of my friends, also a science writer, has not had a cold for two years. He took cod liver oil—no sulfas.

My wife tried the same sulfas I use. She caught colds just the same.

All this is a pointed reminder, not that science writers are peculiar, but that common colds are.

Survey Shows It

How very peculiar, especially in responding to sulfanilamide preparations, is shown in a survey of recent laboratory and human tests, published by Noah D. Fabricant, M.D., University of Illinois College of Medicine, in the American Journal of the Medical Sciences.

Despite a surge of reports that sulfas may end colds, the main medical experiments have been aimed at sinus troubles. Colds were incidental.

If you ask a doctor for a sulfa prescription for colds, he may tell you, as I have been told, that they are too dangerous. The next physician may give you a prescription, as I have been given one, and tell you it is safe.

The laboratory has a basis for its fears. The preparation I mostly have used is sodium sulfathiazole. In the laboratory this preparation largely has destroyed the nasal mucous membranes of rabbits. It has almost destroyed the nasal cilia, which are living hairs, crew-cut style, that bend to and fro to sweep out contamination.

The concentration which did this damage is the same one I have used; but the animals had to take sulfa for several days, while I never took much, in fact not enough to explain the paradox of getting rid of incipient colds.

Swiss mice, tried out on this same preparation, suffered nasal damage.

Is Caustic Type

All doctors know the reason: that particular sulfa preparation is very caustic.

For several years, numerous experiments have been adding other chemicals to reduce caustic effects, and a half-dozen have been developed. They include addition of propylene glycol, allantoin, colloidal silver, triethanolamine and paredrine hydromromide, and various forms of sulfanilamide compounds. Some of these have been reported as promising in human use.

Another one, recently widely publicized, is sodium sulfathiazole with DL-desoxyephedrine hydrochloride, which has several trade names. It is so new that medical literature on it still is comparatively small. The review points out that D-desoxyephedrine hydrochloride, where the only diffenence in name is the initial "D" replacing "DL," is suspected in Germany of being habit-forming and is under the German narcotic law.

The "D" and the "DL" refer to the manner in which the molecules of this preparation cause light to rotate. The rotation is a very small point, but the difference in physical effect may be large. The manufacturers claim the DL form is not habit-forming.

This preparation and some of the others contain vaso-constrictors, which shrink nasal membranes temporarily. The medical review points out that vaso-constrictors have been the most important single group of drugs available to nose and throat physicians. That makes it difficult to estimate how much credit should go to the sulfa preparations.

May Become Resistant

Finally, promiscuous usage of sulfas locally, as in the nasal troubles, may cause a person to become resistant, that is, the drug loses its effect, no matter how taken. There are medical estimates that 5 per cent of the users will become resistant, and that among undernourished groups this percentage may rise to 20.

Dr. Fabricant concludes: "The haste with which some members of the medical profession and the general public have responded to the cry that the local use of sulfanomides in nasal and sinus infection is an effective 'cure-all' is not without some apparent danger."

Worst Labor Problems Unlikely to Be Solved By National Service Law

The President's espousal of a national war service law raises a grave issue in the conduct of the war. Whatever form such a law would take it seems certain to encounter the unanimous opposition of organized labor, excepting the union administrations headed by Messrs. Bridges and Curran. Opinion in Congress is certainly deeply divided on the question, in part because of doubt as to how a national service law would be administered and in part because of doubt as to the considerations which prompted the Administration's indorsement of a law at this stage of the war.

At the time of our entry into the war the arguments for national service were great. We were facing what seemed to be impossible schedules of war production. The scale on which the size of our armed forces was drawn threatened huge shortages of labor—local and national. How the country would organize to meet both military and civilian requirements was our foremost problem.

In spite of the formidable character of these problems, it was the Administration's decision not to invoke the powers and machinery of a universal service act. And more than that, the Administration also decided that the peacetime laws and policies of labor relations, such as the 40-hour week, should not, because of war, be suspended.

Military Services Number Close to 10 Million

We have now completed more than two years of war production. The Army, Navy and related services have collected forces which number close to 10 million. The country's civilian labor force, now fully employed, is estimated at more than 53 million. Total output, though it may not have increased as fast as some people believe, has, nevertheless, expanded more rapidly than anyone in 1941 or 1942 would have ventured to predict.

This performance being what it is, it is natural enough to wonder what lies ahead that requires now a fundamental change in national policy. In a pamphlet containing a model war service act, drawn by that distinguished lawyer and citizen, Grenville Clark, and in its third draft as of November 30, 1942, Mr. Clark marshals the reasons for the immediate adoption of a measure of that general character.

From a reading of his discussion it seems evident that the purpose of the act is to solve the manpower problem. He writes that by the end of 1943 the strength of all the armed forces will make a "grand total of 9,700,000." He goes on to say that "it is as plain as day that we cannot efficiently equip, transport, and supply our own military forces and also efficiently fulfill our other tasks, unless we mobilize our whole working force at home, under a systematic plan. It is plain also that without universal obligation to aid the war effort, no such mobilization can be accomplished." The difficulty he foresaw was "not now so much a question of an over-all shortage of manpower and womanpower. That will undoubtedly come later. But at present, it is rather a question . . . of getting the right people to the right places at the right times. Even this is utterly impossible under the present methods and without compulsory powers in the background. The evidence of local shortages of various kinds of workers is notorious."

Troubles Arise From Labor Policy

Mr. Clark's description and forecast were written in the fall of 1942. Do they apply to the manpower problem as it is today? If they do not, what developments in war production and in the size of the armed services are anticipated which are calculated seriously to aggravate our manpower problems? These would seem to be questions to which the country has a right to look for careful and frank answers before it decides whether or not national service is wise public policy.

With respect to the variety of labor troubles, about which this country has been disturbed, no solution of them is likely to be found in a National Service Act. The issues of wages, prices, policies of work rules must be settled separately and independently. Unless they are settled promptly and courageously they will continue to be a source either of strife or of more difficult economic problems.

A national service law fails to deal with the most troublesome of our labor problems. For they arise from our national labor policy and the way that policy is administered.

Flier Shot Down by Nazis Says Greek Guerillas Want Real Republic

By DREW PEARSON

In view of consistent British support of King George of Greece, the story of Lieut. Frank D. Buehl of Memphis, Tenn., is most interesting.

Lieutenant Buehl, an Army flier, was shot down by the Nazis in a bombing raid on a Nazi airport near Athens. Together with several of his comrades, he parachuted to safety in the hills outside of Athens. After an arduous trek through the mountains, Buehl made contact with Greek and anti-Nazi guerillas who carried him and his companions several hundred miles to their secret mountain headquarters.

"The night before we departed, the guerillas gave a banquet in our honor," Buehl reports. "The leader was a man who lived in New York many years ago. He made a speech about how the Greeks loved the Americans and were helping them to lick the Germans and restore freedom to Greece.

"The Greeks discussed politics and the form of government they wanted. To my amazement, almost to a man they were against the restoration of King George to the Greek throne. They were tired of monarchs and wanted a real democratic Greek republican government. I got up and made a speech, too, telling them that I loved the Greeks—and, by this time, I did love them.

"They sang the Hymn of Liberty, the Greek national anthem, and asked us to sing ours. I was afraid that I didn't know all the words of the Star Spangled Banner, but when we tried, we found out we did know all the words."

Buehl reports that the Greek guerillas are fierce-looking men, armed mostly with rifles from many nations. They have German, Russian, Italian, English and American guns which they have captured in lightning raids on occupation troops. They also have a few machine-guns and hand grenades.

"I was told by the guerrilas that they didn't need any help," says Buehl, "that if the Americans and English would send them enough guns, they could throw the Germans out of their beloved country in a week."

Hoover and Dewey

Friends who have talked to Herbert Hoover recently say he has virtually become unofficial campaign manager for Gov. Tom Dewey. However, Hoover readily admits that Dewey will have a fight on his hands to get the Republican nomination.

Shortly after Alf Landon, the GOP 1936 nominee, indicated that Dewey could win the nomination on the first ballot, Hoover told Landon that it was foolish to assume that Wendell Willkie, whom Hoover considers the "man to be beat" at the GOP convention, would not offer formidable resistance.

However, Hoover scoffs at the idea that Gen. Douglas MacArthur will get anywhere. The former President still accuses MacArthur of trying to shift the blame to him for the bloodshed that occurred during the famous "Bonus March" on Washington, while MacArthur was Chief of Staff under Hoover.

"There is no way to introduce General MacArthur to the country under circumstances that would justify his nomination," Hoover tells friends. "Unless he retires from the Army—and I don't think he will in time for the campaign—it would appear that he was putting personal ambition ahead of his job in the Pacific in order to become a presidential candidate. I am sure that the general has no such intention."

When Hoover gets wound up on the subject, he adds something that has stuck in his craw since the "Bonus March."

"I got the blame for that incident," he recently told a friend, "but I never instructed General MacArthur to operate as he did on the bonus marchers. I merely ordered him to 'handle the situation' as Chief of Staff."

Hoover believes that MacArthur's strict sense of military discipline got the better of him on this occasion and that the bonus uprising could have been put down without filling Pennsylvania ave. with tanks and burning the pitiful personal belongings of the veterans.

Another gnawing antipathy in the former President's breast is British interference in American politics. Hoover never overlooks an opportunity to relate a story, which he insists is first hand, about a trans-Atlantic phone call which Lord Beaverbrook is said to have made to New York newspaper publishers after the 1942 congressional elections.

According to Hoover, Beaverbrook told the publishers: "You should stop these attacks on President Roosevelt. We will need him as a World President after the war."

Wisconsin Rejects Wallace

The few high-up Administrationites who know the whole story consider recent happenings at the Wisconsin Democratic convention extremely significant. The chief fight among Wisconsin Democrats was over Henry Wallace as running mate on a Roosevelt fourth-term ticket.

Inside story of what happened is this. Democratic National Chairman Frank Walker and Federal Economic Administrator Leo Crowley asked Congressman Howard McMurray to go out to Wisconsin and make a fight for Wallace with his fellow Democrats. The fact that these two high-up Democrats both went down the line for Wallace is considered significant in itself. It puts to rest ideas that FDR is veering toward Jimmy Byrnes as a running mate.

When Congressman McMurray got out to Milwaukee, he encountered tough sledding. Old Line Wisconsin Democrats were delighted to pledge for Roosevelt for a fourth term, considered him the only man with a real chance of winning. But they would not take Wallace. The battle against him was led by State Senator Tony Gawronski of South Milwaukee, Senator James H. Carroll, and former Senator Harry W. Bolens.

The battle continued until late in the evening. But the old guard, frequently called "Postoffice Democrats" because their chief objective has been patronage, stood pat. This is the crowd which never has been enthusiastic about a Democratic coalition with Wisconsin Progressives in order to mold one liberal party out of the two.

After the battle was over and McMurray reported back to Washington, Leo Crowley suggested that the Congressman go to see Vice President Wallace and explain just how things had happened so that Wallace would not be too hurt. This McMurray did.

Wallace, however, is not taking the defeat lying down. He is going to stage his own personal invasion of Wisconsin on February 11 with a big meeting in Milwaukee at which he will be introduced by Bill Evjue, fighting editor of the Madison Capital Times and one of the most influential men in the State. The meeting will be the tip-off in a campaign to amalgamate Wisconsin Progressives with Democrats into a unity group.

Capital Chaff

By freezing labor, a national service act might stop the troublesome turnover in White House help. Maids and butlers are quitting. . . . As soon as Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hopkins left the White House, cerpenters and paper-hangers moved in. The three-room suite now has a new floor finish and new wall paper. . . . Manpower shortage brings employment for everybody—even the mental cases. Result is a sharp drop in the number of cranks who come to the White House gates demanding a private interview with the President. . . . Senator Ralph Brewster of Maine, a dry, used to have a hard time refusing drinks at Capital cocktail parties. "But now," he says, "with liquor so scarce, I'm the most popular man at the party!" . . . When diplomats run out of liquor, that's a story. Carlos Campbell of the Chilean Embassy burst into the office of Chilean Ambassador Michels, saying "Don Rodolfo, please lend me a case of wine for tonight; I'm having a party!" "I can't do it," replied the Ambassador. "I have no wine myself!" . . . The Russian capture of Berlin is described in Albert Parry's new book, "Russian Cavalcade." Date of the capture—1760.

War Production:

By the Washington Staff of the Associated Press

Best new estimates on coming cutbacks in munitions production, on the basis of WPB information and President Roosevelt's budget message—

Arms procurement in the next six months will average about 11 per cent lower than the peak reached in November, when the rate of 69 billion dollars a year was achieved.

In the following 12 months (mid-1944 to mid-1945), the rate will be about 18½ per cent lower than November.

Willkie's Rank and File Strength Must Beat GOP Chiefs' Opposition

When Mr. Wendell Willkie began to be discussed as a possibility for the Republican presidential nomination one fact was obvious—and pregnant. Support of him by Republican leaders was less than support of him by Republican voters.

A characteristic showing occurred early last summer. A poll of Republican members of the House of Representatives at Washington placed Mr. Willkie low, fourth on the list—he got only 13 votes from 174 members polled, about 7 per cent. This was a characteristic expression of the feeling of Republican local leaders in congressional districts throughout the country.

About the same time a Gallup poll, taken of rank and file Republican voters, placed Mr. Willkie much higher. Though not at the top of the list, he got 28 per cent. (He was led by Governor Dewey of New York, with 38 per cent.)

Here then, compactly, was the situation about last June: Among Republican leaders Mr. Willkie had 7 per cent; among Republican voters he had 28 per cent.

Needs Voters to Win

In this situation one condition was fundamental, certain to determine the outcome. If Mr. Willkie was to win the nomination he must win it by increasing his strength among Republican voters. By hardly any possibility could be win by increasing his strength among Republican leaders—his support among them was slight to build upon. But if Mr. Willkie could markedly increase his strength among Republican voters he would be favored in two ways. If he could build up his voter strength from 28 per cent to approximately 50 per cent of the total he would be practically assured of the nomination by that fact. Also, if he could markedly increase his strength among Republican voters such a demonstration would be taken into account by Republican leaders, it would abate their opposition to him.

That was the situation Mr. Willkie faced last June. Has he in the meantime increased his strength among Republican voters? The answer seems to be clearly no. In the most recently published (December 19) Gallup poll of Republican voters throughout the Nation, Willkie gets actually less than he had in June. He gets now only 25 per cent (against 28 per cent in June).

That Mr. Willkie has not increased his strength among Republican voters has some meaning, of course, for only by that method can he win the nomination. But his failure to increase his strength so far is by no means decisive. For that matter, the evidence we have is not decisive—polls, even if taken ever so carefully by Dr. Gallup, are, after all, informal and not conclusively probative.

Chance in Primaries

Mr. Willkie's real chance to show how he stands among Republican voters is ahead of him, and begins within two months. That chance lies in the State primaries.

The State primaries are official tests, conducted under law. If, in a considerable number of States, Mr. Willkie enters the Republican primaries, and wins them by material majorities, he will by that fact show convincingly that he stands well with Republican voters. And if he makes this convincing demonstration, in a sufficient number of States, the Republican leaders will take notice of it, and so will the Republican National Convention.

What will count is the popular vote Mr. Willkie gets in primaries—not the number of convention delegates he wins. By no means all the States hold primaries, and the primary laws of the States are complex and varied. In some States, the primary is optional; in some not conclusively binding on the delegates. Only in comparatively few States do the primary laws give the voters opportunity to say, specifically and bindingly, whom they prefer for the presidential nomination. Even if Mr. Willkie should win the primary in every State in which the laws provide for a conclusive contest, he would still be short of enough delegates to compose a majority of the convention.

It is not the number of delegates won by Mr. Willkie that will count—it is the popular vote he gets. Mr. Willkie's chance lies in entering those State primaries which give the voters a clear-cut opportunity to say whom they prefer for the Republican presidential nomination—whether Mr. Willkie or Governor Dewey or some other.

Mr. Willkie's chance lies in making whirlwind personal campaigns in those States and winning them. He would do well to enter all the States in which the primary laws provide for such a clear-cut expression of the wish of the voters. The virtue and purpose of such a course by Mr. Willkie would be to impress Republican leaders and impress the country. Only by showing that he is strong with the rank and file of Republican voters is Mr. Willkie likely to get the nomination.

The primaries—some of which provide opportunity for a clear-cut test of popular preference and some of which do not—begin March 14 in New Hampshire. Six more follow in April; Wisconsin and New York, April 4; Illinois and Nebraska, April 11; Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, April 25. Others follow in May.

Midwest Manufacturer, Stranger in Washington, Finds Things to Praise

By RAW

(RAW, who prefers to remain otherwise anonymous, has spent most of his life in a manufacturing business in the Midwest. He is now in Washington to "assist in my small way" in one of the war agencies.)

Much has been written about Washington, D. C., and its inability to cope with many of its simple problems of wartime living. The rest of the country has been told that the stranger here is as so much dirt under the feet of Washington's hotels, restaurants, rooming houses, and service function. These articles would lead one to believe that a newcomer may as well face the fact that "He who enters here, leaves hope behind."

You are supposed to be gypped, blackjacked and bombasted by everyone.

If you are able to return to your meager quarters at night with a degree of sanity you are presumed to be exceptional.

This defense is being voiced by one who came to Washington a few months ago and who, until then, had only known Washington as a comfortable, beautiful city, filled with Government workers, visitors' guides and souvenir salesmen.

To many of the drab experiences in Washington that have been broadcast in the press and current magazines, the writer can ascribe credit, for he has witnessed them many times. To the cold, disinterested glare of one who has no desire and no intention of serving, he has submitted.

Look for Trouble and You Get It

In spite of this, I feel that from my somewhat detached viewpoint, I have participated in enough of these common, ordinary, day-in-day-out experiences here in Washington to enable me to present a little different picture of this World Capital under the stress of the present emergency.

It is in defense of those solid citizens of Washington that I dedicate these lines.

The following random personal experiences will illustrate my point, which boiled down is simply this—

Those who come to Washington with a demanding, pugnacious—"I want this and I'm going to get it"—will run into a peck of trouble and will get slammed from every side.

And those who come here without any backbone and assume a wholly submissive attitude, will be trampled upon aplenty.

But—those who bring their natural selves, with courtesy and solicitation, and an evident desire to cooperate, will get, in most instances, what they seek—even in wartime Washington.

In the following paragraphs the advance warnings I had received appear in the first sentences in italics. What I discovered to be the truth appears after each "warning."

HOTELS—"They're usually overcrowded with little or no service."

If you will calmly and tolerantly discuss your problems with your host, he will usually work things out. Upon arriving I went to a small hotel and didn't enjoy the only available room. Later, however, I received a more pleasant room and when my wife joined me the innkeeper went to considerable trouble to put in order a small housekeeping apartment for us. True, the conveniences were not everything we desired, but my wife and I pitched in and had fun doing a few little inexpensive things that added to our comfort and brought a compliment from the proprietor.

RESTAURANTS—"The portions are small and the service pretty terrible."

If you indicate that you do understand there are difficulties with food points, supply and labor, then you stand a pretty good chance of reasonable treatment. Try thanking the waitress in a friendly tone, and don't be surprised if she exclaims, "Well, thank you, it's a pleasure to wait on someone like you in times like these."

FLOWER SHOPS—"Interested only in getting your money."

On one occasion I went into a floral store where the proprietor refused to sell me his last gardenia—because it wasn't entirely fresh! He told me however that if I wanted to risk using it, he would give it to me. I accepted and then he insisted upon attaching a lovely ribbon bow, and placing it in a neat box—no charge! Other flower shops have been interested and helpful, almost without exception.

DOCTORS—"Don't try to get a Doctor in Washington."

I needed a doctor for a sudden, severe ailment so I went to one in my neighborhood. It was the second time I had seen him—the first trip had been for a rather cursory physical examination. I found him attentive and responsive. He referred me to a specialist whom, by his arrangement, I met within the hour. The specialist cared for me daily and went so far as to offer to see me on an intervening Sunday.

He would gladly, he said, spend an hour each way, traveling to and from his home, if it would be helpful to me—a stranger.

Fortunately, the need for him on Sunday did not arise, but I am positive that he would have been his usual pleasant, affable, competent self if I had called him.

RADIO REPAIRS—"You can't get one repaired in Washington under several weeks."

In spite of this I had a good-sized repair job done efficiently at reasonable cost in two days. When I thanked the two brothers who operate this shop for their courtesy and dispatch, one of them said, "We are life-long residents of Washington and we feel badly that a lot of folks have come here and gone into business during the war who don't seem to care how they treat people."

TAXICABS—"Watch those birds, they're all fly-by-night, out to hook you."

I disagree. In some 60 or 70 trips by taxi, I have met only one driver who was discourteous and scheming. I have been turned down, of course, by a cab almost entirely loaded, headed, say northwest, when I needed to go southeast, but certainly there is nothing wrong in "clubbing" their fares for conservation purposes.

TAILOR SHOP—I had to go into the second shop before my story—"I'm losing my buttons"—made any impression. There the proprietor, visibly sympathizing with my need for immediate attention, said cheerfully, "Well, we'll have to take Shorty off the job he's on and give you some help right away."

DEPARTMENT STORES—Here there are many part-time inexperienced people. One of these new clerks, a middle-aged lady, was very pleasant and helpful. I wanted to buy a dress ornament, and this lady, seeing that I was not pleased with the only piece on the counter and noting that I was "eyeing" the photograph of a slightly different kind, said cheerfully, "If you'll like one, I'll be glad to go to the stock room and see if I can find it." She said it would take about a half an hour. Meanwhile I wandered about and bought five times what I had expected to buy all because of this kindly soul. When she returned she seemed pleased that she'd found the ornament I wanted.

GROCERY STORE—When I said, "Do you resent your customers returning items with which they are not entirely satisfied," she said: "Certainly not, sir, we want you satisfied," and graciously she accepted my complaint and refunded by money.

WASHINGTON COPS—They are universally courteous and helpful. Never once have I been made to feel that I was imposing on their time. Somewhere in their excellent training is a definite "something" that imbues them with the feeling that they are the servants of a somewhat bewildered and confused public, and they are contributing much toward giving a stranger an "at home" feeling.

Try Just Being Natural

I could go on rather ad infinitum; laundries, dentists, dry-cleaners, druggists, hat-shops, and many other avenues of service, most of which are alleged to be cold and unfeeling, here in Washington. Such additions would be superfluous.

Just be natural! Don't put on any airs or affections. Go half-way with folks and show them that you have the good sense to know that there's a war on.

Be courteous and remember that you are coming into another's bailiwick.

You may be a big-timer at home, but you are just another unknown down here. Don't forget that a smile, a calm manner, a well-composed conversation and a friendly approach are still among the "Open Sesames" to many a dark corner and secret vault.

Most Washingtonians deserve this tribute and I think it is fitting to come from a stranger.

500 Washington Volunteers Whoop It Up for Soldiers

Ma Davis' Boys and Girls Lug Make-up Kits After Work to Please Men at Camps Nearby

By Emily Towe

Soldiers call them "Ma Davis' boys and girls!"

Five hundred dancing, singing, quipping, rope-throwing volunteers have just finished a successful year of variety shows in camps near Washington, service clubs and other places in the Capital where the armed forces assemble for rollicking entertainment.

After full days at Government desks, department stores, law offices and scores of other occupations, "Ma Davis' boys and girls" lugged their make-up kits to a total of 729 shows last year.

Their only reward was the joy of hearing soldiers yell "More, more, more!" until the rafters of recreation halls vibrated with the din.

Thousands Entertained

Throughout the 12-month period 242,878 servicemen and 102,000 warworkers laughed at their jokes, cheered pretty girls whose dance lines compare well with professionals, and appreciatively observed other entertainment features of variety acts.

For a group of civilians they've piled into an impressive number of military vehicles — Army buses, command cars, jeeps, a general's clipper, trucks, and once in an airplane.

But still more interesting to the volunteer entertainers are the varied places where they have acted for soldiers. They've performed in the midst of woods. Sometimes a crude stage was erected and a truck was parked alongside as an improvised dressing room. Spotlights gleamed from jeeps. Singers were unaccompanied and dancers depended on the phonograph.

Even Went in Training

Then they went to soldiers on maneuvers. On a sweltering Sunday afternoon last August, they played before 1400 Fort Meade men in a location of which they have not yet learned the name because of military secrecy.

Not long ago the girls were assigned to a men's barracks to change clothes for the performance. One unsuspecting man had not been told of the girls' arrival.

Clad only in his underwear, he dived under a bed.

As the feminine performers darted about the room (much larger than most they had used) the harried soldier crawled from under one bed to another, praying that he would not be detected. This went on for an hour and a half. The girls laughed hilariously when informed of their unconscious persecution of a man in the armed forces. The soldier failed to catch the full humor of the situation.

Finding the Talent

Mrs. Mary Davis is the guiding hand behind these shows. She is a native of Oklahoma who has long been interested in amateur theatricals and a skillful costume designer.

She directs auditions to find talent and personally arranges for the full schedule that has included every Army, Navy and Marine camp in the Washington area and many farther away in Virginia and Maryland.

When Mrs. Davis took over the Volunteer Camp Shows, a Community War Fund Service, a year ago, it was considered a trial project. But the "Mama" of volunteer variety acts is an energetic women challenged by the scope of her undertaking.

Gets Talent From Concerts

Cooperating with special service officers, she has found khaki-clad Metropolitan Opera singers, concert pianists and performers of other types for Army shows at the Sylvan Theater, high school auditoriums and hospitals. Her monthly "Entertainment Please" concerts at Central auditorium sparkle with talent of fine artists whom she brings from camps to the Capital.

She has even placed sailors in Army shows and one of her most popular singers is a trim little Wave who practically brings down the auditorium.

Last week I was invited to attend a show with these lively volunteers at Fort Meade. At 6:30 p. m. Thursday they assembled at the Information Building at 14th and Pennsylvania ave., some sitting on make-up cases and others humming over sheets of music they planned to sing that night.

20 Performers Ride Bus

As we climbed into the long Army bus awaiting outside, Mrs. Davis counted off 20 performers, one wife of a volunteer and three mothers. The fresh pretty faces of the girls, who wore scant make-up on the trip to camp, bore out Ma Davis' explanation that they were selected to remind soldiers of the sweetheart back home instead of a professional chorus girl.

During the hour's ride some one passed around a box of candy. A veteran of 100 shows moved up to encourage a shy little girl out on her first program. "It's all right kid! You'll make the grade."

Then they sang over her selection as competition in the form of other crooning rehearsers and chatting boys and girls resounded through the bus.

After dinner in one of the Meade mess halls, the performers filed over to the recreation hall. The girls crowded into the tiny dressing room backstage where they primped before tiny mirrors, jumped into snappy tap dance costumes. They agreed to a girl that it was more fun to perform for service men than officers because they were more responsive.

'One Minute to Go'

"All right, girls! One minute to curtain time!" Mrs. Davis whispered into the room. The singers swished their evening dresses closer to them so the dancers could adjust their uniforms, and then four girls with shapely legs pranced out on the stage for the tap line.

The "magic" of a patent lawyer who amazed the soldiers with disappearing handkerchiefs and a parasol from India . . . pretty Maxine Waters, Government worker who looked like a movie star in white and sequins as she sang "Put Your Arms Around Me, Honey." . . . C. B. Tart, a Library of Congres typist, whose garish plaid shirt enhanced his hill-billy songs (though Tart is from North Carolina mountains, he insisted that his artistry was entirely original). . . . The golden voice of Nellie Ruth Boyd, a War Production Board typist from Oklahoma, who sings "My Hero" at every performance "because the boys love it." . . . Ensign Mary Conlon, singing Wave whose uniform brings applause from the Army men . . . these were just a few highlights from the show.

Hall in Cowboy Roles

Wilbur Hall, 25, a Navy Department employe, described himself as an "old-timer," a veteran of "pretty close to 10 shows." In his cowboy act with appropriate costume, he throws a rope around and does a little juggling on the side. He explained with amateur's pride that the Capitol and Earle Theaters had engaged him on several different occasions for stage talent.

His wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Hall, who accompanied him, laughed: "I get stage fright for my husband. It's really funny but I hold my breath until his act is over."

Hall is not the only amateur whose volunteer performances have developed enough skill to send him into the professional realm. Mrs. Davis said that several dancing girls had been engaged by the Earle. She also named a couple of her former boys and girls who had gone professional in New York.

Patent Lawyer Performs

P. E. Henninger, 35, is a patent lawyer with offices in the National Press Building.

He forgets his legal duties completely in sleight-of-hand tricks for the soldiers and delights his audience in asking a serviceman to step up on the stage to assist in the "magic."

When last Thursday's accommodating soldier stepped up on the stage midst the cheers and boos of his buddies, he yelled: "If I disappear, boys, tell my captain I didn't mean to go AWOL." The private didn't disappear but the handkerchiefs did.

Miss Gretchen Rickel, assistant director, a former Broadway actress who played in "The Old Maid" and toured the country with stock companies, presented a variety show at another Fort Meade recreation hall that night. Among her star performers was Nancy Hanck, 16-year-old Central High School student who is colonel of the Girl Cadets of Washington. A veteran of 130 camp shows, she was accompanied by her mother. But Nancy certainly did not need family applause—the servicemen came forth with enough handclapping to make any performer happy.

Gloria Grisso, 19, a war plant worker who dances the hula-hula and sings, was recently elected the "Queen of the Fifth Regiment" at Fort Meade.

After the show, the soldiers beseiged the comely performers for autographs.

One enthusiastic serviceman from Alabama discovered that a singer came from his native State. He insisted that the girl couldn't leave until she autographed her initials on the back of his shirt.

Old-Time Favorites

On the trip back home, the performers sang every old-time favorite they could remember—from "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" to "You Great Big Beautiful Doll." But the high point of the song fest was George Cohan's "Mary," dedicated to Mrs. Mary Davis. The veteran director of amateur theatricals, who conducted similar entertainment projects during the first World War, confided: "Perhaps I'm sentimental, but when the boys and girls sing that song to me—well, the way I feel just couldn't be put in words."

House D. C. Committee at Work

Personnel of Varied Talent, Ability Has Had Part in Many Investigations

By James E. Chinn

One of the hardest working committees of Congress—when it works—is the House District Committee. Investigations are its specialty.

Over the years, the past 10 in particular, many municipal agencies have felt the barb of the committee's probe. It has, in this period, twice investigated the Police Department. A scandal in traffic light contract awards was cleared up. An inquiry into conditions at the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains was for many years a perennial habit.

Washington's milk supply was checked, not from the standpoint of its purity and adequacy so much as it was to find out if the organized dairy farmers in the Maryland and Virginia milkshed had a monopolistic control on the Washington market.

Now a subcommittee is on the threshhold of another investigation, this on the war's effect on juvenile delinquency.

Grinds Out New Laws

Despite its investigative tendencies, the committee has managed to find time to devote to the District's major legislative problems and needs, and out of its mill has come much constructive legislation—legislation that has made Washington a better city in which to live, a cleaner and more healthful city, and above all, a city which no longer shocks the Nation with its crime record.

At the moment the committee is operating with a full complement of 21 members—11 Democrats and 10 Republicans.

Its chairman and guiding genius is Representative Randolph (Democrat) of West Virginia, who is marked with such laudable characteristics as a prophetic vision and a rare combination of aggressiveness, pleasing personality and a mental and physical spirit that a stroke of adversity cannot shatter.

Approaching a mature 42 in years, Randolph in stature and physique, looks more like an athletic instructor (which he was back in his college days) than a seasoned politician with a record of nearly 12 years of continuous service in the House, His firm hand clasp and "my, you're looking fine" greeting, is a surefire tonic for the sick, the dejected and the troubled constituents who find his office not too far from West Virginia for an occasional visit.

Randolph took direct charge of at least two of the outstanding investigations.

Most of the long forgotten probes that developed into sensations were led by members—some no longer in Congress—who had no particular aversion to seeing their names in bold face type in the headlines.

D'Alesandro's Role

One that some House members would like to have forgotten, but is still talked about in whispered conversation, was supposedly confined to milk. Its offshoots and ramifications wandered into the private lives of some of the principals, who learned later in utter amazement that dictaphones had been used to catch their thoughtless words in moments of ecstasy.

At present the champion of investigation on the committee is Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat) of Maryland. A dyed-in-the-wool exponent of good, clean, government, he is ever ready to undertake an inquiry, no matter how difficult and tiresome, if he thinks it will improve conditions.

His relentless activities have brought about improvements at the Home for the Aged and Infirm, in traffic conditions and in public health and sanitation.

He is prepared now to lead the probe into the District's child delinquency problems, which is scheduled to get under way tomorrow with a number of authorities the principal witnesses.

Has Seven Children

"Tommy" D'Alesandro is rounding out his second successive term in the House, and was well trained for his legislative duties in the Maryland House of Delegates. Not quite 41 years old, he has fathered seven children—six sons and a daughter—in 14 years of marital life.

Good-natured Representative McGehee (Democrat) of Mississippi, is, by seniority in service, ranking majority member on the committee, and probably has the toughest assignment. He's chairman of the judiciary subcommittee which usually has more District legislation to consider than the other subcommittees combined.

McGehee is not so keen about participating in investigations, but another Democratic member, Representative Hebert of Louisiana, will not shun one if he thinks it has a worthwhile objective.

Two years ago he initiated and directed the probe that led to the last shakeup in the police department and the elevation to superintendent of Maj. Edward J. Kelly.

A hard fighting newspaperman by profession, Hebert gave up a job on the city desk of the New Orleans States to toss his hat into Louisiana's torrid political ring. He was elected to Congress on the first cast. As a newspaperman he learned about politics as a political reporter in Louisiana during the hectic Huey Long regime.

His Paper Honored

The paper on which he served as city editor "broke" the Louisiana scandal in June, 1939, and was subsequently awarded the Sigma Delta Chi plaque for "courage in journalism."

Quiet-spoken Representative McMillan of South Carolina, philosophical Representative Russell of Texas, and energetic Representative Harris of Arkansas are the other veteran Democratic members on the committee. The remainder, all freshmen who learned rapidly that the District Committee has as many problems to solve for the voteless residents of Washington as Congress does for those through the rest of the Nation who have a voice in their government, are:

Representative Lesinski of Michigan, Rowan of Illinois, Murphy of Pennsylvania, Feighan of Ohio, and Abernathy of Mississippi.

Lesinski has been in the House for nearly 12 years, but until last year was overlooked for a District Committee assignment. A builder and realtor by profession, he constructed about 4000 homes on the fringe of Detroit before reaching the age of 26.

This gigantic development became the nucleus around which the city of Hamtramck was built.

Served in Chicago

Rowan's political career was founded on 16 years of service on the Chicago City Council, prior to which he edited a daily newspaper in Calumet, Mich. Murphy, Feighan and Abernathy are lawyers with many prominent legal connections.

Touseled haired Representative Dirksen of Illinois, who has Presidential aspirations, heads up the Republican delegation on the District Committee and is Chairman Randolph's chief counselor, for partisan politics is strictly taboo on this committee.

Dirksen's long service on the committee has made him one of its most valuable members and in many of the District's new laws on the statute books can be found his handiwork.

Bates Well-Informed

Another active Republican member with a long service record is Representative Bates of Massachusetts, who can discuss with authority almost any municipal problem ranging from taxes to police efficiency. For 14 years he was the Mayor of Salem, Mass., and held that post for a time after his election to the House.

Representative Baldwin of New York is the only other veteran Republican member on the committee. He was once a newspaper reporter but found his real niche in big corporations, which made him a director.

The six remaining Republican members are Representatives Auchincloss of New Jersey, LeFevre of New York, Simpson of Illinois, Rohrbough of West Virginia, Rowe of Ohio and Beall of Maryland.

Auchincloss came to Congress with a background of experience in a bank, as a deputy police commissioner of New York City, and Mayor of Rumson, N. Y., where he was serving his third term in this office when he was elected to the House.

Educator in Group

Rohrbough, before coming to Congress, had many connections with educational institutions in West Virginia and was president of the Glenville State Teachers' College. LeFevre has been associated with his father in the lumber, feed and fuel oil business in New Paltz, N. Y.

Five terms on the city council of Akron, Ohio, preceded Rowe's election to the House. And Beall, whose home is in Frostburg, Md., took the House seat of former Representative Kathryn Byron, a Democrat, after serving in the Maryland State Senate and as chairman of the Maryland State Road Commission.

Americans Make Partners Of Head-Hunting Burmese

By James E. Brown

International News Service Staff Writer

Assam-Burma Frontier, Jan. 23 (INS).—The rugged, malaria-infested Naga Hills of Burma are the scene of one of the strangest partnerships created in any wartime theater—between American soldiers and Naga headhunting natives.

Unlike many such efforts of cooperation, this has not gradually faded into mutual dislike and distrust, but has grown stronger upon a solid basis of equal advantages to both parties.

Two types of natives—Kachins and Naga—are employed by the Americans as porters, guides, and scouts.

They Know the Slang

The natives have picked up much American slang which they are fond of using at every opportunity. They solemnly open a can of bully beef, look at it and then imitate an American soldier by saying, "No damn good."

An American missionary, climbing a mountain trail, was astonished to meet beautiful, lightly clad Naga girls who greeted him, "Hi, Toots; what's cooking?"

There are many indications the Nagas are genuinely fond of the Americans and try to protect them constantly. They precede soldiers over trails, guarding against ambush, and make great efforts to obtain berries and local vegetables as gifts.

Some of Their Head Work

Among head-hunting Nagas, a woman's or a child's head is considered a more valuable trophy than a man's head because possession of it indicates the warrior had to invade a village to get it, whereas he might have killed a man on the trail without risk. Nagas do not treat these heads liks some South American tribes.

They do not attempt to shrink or preserve them but are content with placing them on sticks around their bamboo huts where they reman conspicuous with their gleaming white bones.

The Nagas feed lost Americans hot peppery soup with rice and rice wine, which is not unlike beer. Nagas all are afflicted with jungle sores, which the Americans treat for them. The natives are very proud of the bandages and have even been known to cut themselves to get one.

Soldiers and native girls frequently exchange gifts. When a girl removes the bamboo bracelet always worn just below the knee and gives it to a man, who wears it above the elbow, it means they are intimate friends.

Tiny, Deadly Snake

Neither Kachins nor Nagas ever travel the trails at night, because they fear wild animals and snakes. The tiny krait snake is considered one of the deadliest snakes in the world.

The natives are becoming familiar with airplanes but still some fear and awe remains.

American forward posts have selected 16-year-old boys from several villages, cut their hair American style, made them take daily baths and have given them uniforms and trained them. The boys learn eagerly, and sit around the campfire at night studying old American magazines. The boys know all the good hunting places, and they are faithful workers. Sisters and mothers of the boys come from the villages to do wash for the Americans.

Both Nagas and Kachins love singing, their favorite being "Old MacDonald Had a Farm, Eeyi Eeyi O," which is known throughout northern Burma.

High School Home Economics Gives Family Tables Different Glitter

By Margaret Davis

If a high school girl is part of your family, your sweet tooth probably was satisfied during the holidays with unrationed products she learned to use in school. Potato fondant and popcorn candles are two of the "candy" creations you may have eaten at Christmas when store candy supplies were low.

Since the war, the school home economics department has been anxious that boys and girls as well as adults 'in its special classes know how to provide wholesome as well as tempting tables, to keep themselves well and neatly clothed, to make their homes attractive places.

Folders Issued

At Christmas time, folders were issued to about 350 teachers outlining plans for making gifts, and holiday decorations and for holiday "menus with no strain on ration points."

These ideas were disseminated to about 700 students and from them to the city's homes.

Mrs. Ola Day Rush, head of the home economics department for divisions 1 to 9, explains it like this:

When a pebble drops in the brook, circles form and widen. The heads of the departments try to furnish pebbles, she said, and ask the teachers to spread the circles.

Mrs. Madeleine W. Kirkland, head of divisions 10 to 13, says the war challenges home economists to meet immediate home needs.

Family Tables

Some gifts were made from leftovers and salvaged goods. That smart drawstring purse may been made from an old soft felt hat. Shoe bags and pot holders were made from old shirts or turkish towels, remnants of tapestry and drapery material.

Toy counters became barren before Christmas, but many a little boy or girl received with joy a wooden toy of several years vintage because some older brother or sister took time to repaint it for him.

Meals Get Attention

Students in home economics classes were not allowed to forget food. The groaning board is out of place, but they were urged to share the hospitality of their homes. They were told how to provide full meals and tempting special foods which were easy to get.

Icebox sherbet or Indian pudding may have appeared on your table as an economical though tempting

A craving for sweets in holiday time is as old as time itself, according to Mrs. Rush, and the home economics department was specially interested in satisfying that craving in a wholesome way this season.

Proper nutrition is a continuing project of the schools. Other special wartime projects include a program of canning for adults, and special study of home equipment maintenance.

This included learning to care for and repair electric heaters because so many families use them for supplementary heat. Students were trained to draw shades at night to conserve fuel, to turn off lights to conserve electric power, principles of simple wiring and handling of fuse boxes and many other useful household information.

Knowledge of homemaking as is offered by the school home economics department in war or peacetime should no longer be considered a special subject, says Mrs. Rush, but an essential part of every young person's training.

College Calendar

Georgetown University

The Graduate School opens its second term on February 3 with two special series of public lectures in addition to the regular courses. Registration for the new term takes place from January 31 to February 2, inclusive, the school announced.

The special lectures will be open to the public on Tuesday evenings during the term. Dr. Charles C. Tansill of Washington, an authority on international relations, will lecture on "American Diplomacy Since 1900." Dean Hunter Guthrie will give a series on "The History and Nature of Modern Culture."

Mary Washington College

The Club Hispano Americano will present in Spanish a light opera, "Cielito Lindo," on Saturday evening, January 29, in the auditorium of George Washington Hall, Fredericksburg, Va. The operetta, written by Dr. Louis J. Cabrera of the Roman language department of the college, has been performed at the American University here and at the University of Maine.

Catholic University

The School of Social Work is offering a Psychiatric Case Work Seminar on Monday evenings from 7 to 9 p. m., which will be conducted by Dr. Rex Buxton and Miss Grace LeMoine. The course will deal with current social problems deal with current social problem.

George Washirngton U.

Willard H. Yeager, professor of public speaking, has been elected executive secretary of the National Association of Teachers of Speech.

Outlines of the courses in a program of training for vocational counselors will be made available to other institutions throughout the country. Cooperating with the university in instituting this new program are the vocational Administration, the United States Employment Service and the Federal Security Agency.

American University

Wartime speed-up in educational progress is featured for both day and evening registrants enrolling now for classes which begin on February 2 in the college of arts and sciences, and on February 7 in the downtown school of social sciences and public affairs.

Accelerated evening courses in five foreign languages leading to spoken fluency in half the time formerly required are among the more than 100 courses now open at the 1901 F st. downtown school.

New Dance-Drama Given for Children

"The Shoemaker and the Elves," a new dance drama by Josephine Booth, based on the Grimm's fairy tale, was presented Saturday afternoon by the Dance Theater at Dupont circle.

The modern adaptation of the familiar story of the poor but deserving shoemaker and his wife was read by Miss Booth, while these characters were portrayed by Batya Heller and Miriam McCollum. The little elves were played by junior members of the group, Gretta Aitkins, 13, and Selma Berstein, 11.

The program, first of the Dance Theater's children's performances, left character portrayal largely to the individual, as will others in the series.

Forest Drain Held Menace to Postwar Needs

The current growth of timber in the United States is not much more than half of anticipated postwar requirements, Lyle F. Watts, new chief of the Federal Forest Service, warned in his first annual report to Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture.

Wartime demands, he said, have caused a drain upon the forests 25 per cent above prewar levels and the timber deficit of postwar Europe probably will be greater than the anticipated surplus of all the rest of the world.

Regulation Proposed

"An effective program" for America, Watts said, "would consist of a Nation-wide regulation of forest practices on private land, supplemented by an expanded and accelerated program of public acquisition to relieve private ownership of unproductive territory. By this program, he said, "annual growth can be increased to a level which will supply our people and industries with ample timber for all foreseeable needs at reasonable cost" with a margin for export or emergency use.

To curtail destructive logging, Watts asked for new Federal legislation that will prescribe standards for required forest practices and that will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to determine whether the practices adopted by the several States conform to such standards. Where suitable legislation has not been enacted, the Secretary should be empowered to take direct action.

Field for Employment

Regulation, he said, must be supported by immediate procedure in taking over some 150 million acres of depleted forest land now in private ownership. Not only will this assure future timber, but it will provide employment for thousands during the demobilization period.

While indicating that the present "pinch" on the civilian use of forest products in this country will become even more acute before the end of the war, he reported that "purchases for direct war use in the first six months of 1943 were greater than in the preceding six months and the total cut for 1943 had fallen some 10 million feet below the 1942 figure. Inventories of retail yards, he said, have revealed that stock has declined by more than a third during the first half of 1943 leaving them 60 per cent below the Pearl Harbor figure.

POVICH

A note from Buck Newsom says, "I see in the papers where Connie Mack says I'm not a bad actor, just a big overgrown boy. We won't have any trouble, but I'm going to insist on a man's salary. That big boy business can be carried too far" . . . the breakdown shows that of the 191 American League players in the armed services, 74 are pitchers, 20 are catchers, 36 outfielders, and 61 infielders . . . 108 are in the Army, 67 in the Navy, 10 in the Coast Guard, 2 in the Marines, 3 with the Candian forces and 1 (Charley Keller) in the Merchant Marine . . . the new crop of 2-year-olds which attained racing age on January 1, reflects the martial spirit of the times in the names they bear . . . either racing now or soon to race are colts named Crash Boat, Shore Leave, Commando Gal, Top General, Fighting Boat, Long Flight and War Wine . . . John Q. Public will have a rooting interest in a 2-year-old named, fittingly enough, John Q. Public . . . Frank X. Reagan, Penn's All-American halfback who put in a season with the New York Giants before joining the Marines, is now a captain in command of a Marine detachment aboard a dreadnaught . . . and Bob Barnett, center and captain of Duke's 1941 Rose Bowl team, is flying a bomber with the Marines in the Bougainville sector . . . Redskin Halfback Ray Hare, holder of a civilian pilot's license, is headed for duty in the Army Transport Command.

Tom O'Donnell's offer of $5,000 for a half-interest in Aaron Perry, 18-year-old colored welterweight, was on the level . . . Perry, who spilled Vic Creelman on the floor and went on to win a clear-cut decision the other night, appeared ripe to be knocked out himself in the first round when Creelman tagged him with two rights to the chin . . . he weathered that round and went back to his corner, telling his manager, Harry Garsh, "I'm gonna win this fight" . . . Garsh, completely smitten with young Perry's punching and aptitude, has already received offers to put him in Madison Square Garden . . . Chich Wergeles, manager of Beau Jack, has offered to bet $500 that his fighter can lick Joe Louis on the golf course, but Garsh says, "I'll bet $1,000 that Perry can beat 'em both at golf" . . . Perry, who caddied at the Chevy Chase Club, shoots in the low 70's, and bought a new set of $75 clubs with his first ring earnings . . . Promoter Goldie Ahearn has offered Perry bouts with Sammy Angott, Henry Armstrong, Lew Hanbury and Billy Banks . . . the Perry-Creelman fight was Ahearn's most profitable show of the year, grossing $6200 and costing him only 35 per cent for the main bout, which often runs as high as 60 per cent . . . Sammy Daniels, Baltimore welterweight who is a four-time winner over Charley Bennett, has snatched up Frankie Wills' offer to fight anybody in a local ring with the provision that the entire purse be given to the President's Birthday Paralysis Fund.

If the 1944 baseball season opened tomorrow, the Washington Club's lineup would be George Case, lf; Joe Kuhel, 1b; Gene Moore, rf; Stan Spence, cf; Harland Clift, 3b; Johnny Sullivan, ss; Fermin Guerra, c; George Myatt, 2b, and Johnny Niggeling, p . . . 22,000 feet of film were shot to attain the 2000 feet used in the American League's movie, "The 1943 World Series," of which 350 prints have been shipped to American troop centers overseas . . . Waddy Young, who played end for the Brooklyn Dodgers after graduating from Oklahoma University in 1938, has been decorated with the Air Medal and an Oak Leaf Cluster for his flying feats in the European theater . . . Lieutenant Young, remembered for his crashing type of play at end, carried his football tactics into air battle with the report that "he downed two Nazi fighters and broke up an entire enemy formation on one of his first combat missions" . . . when Walter Johnson broke into the big leagues in 1907, he found a friend in Umpire Tom Connolly who displayed great tolerance of Johnson's greenness and unfamiliarity with the pitching rules . . . one day when Johnson tried the sandlot trick of bluffing a throw to first base, the Detroit Tigers screamed that it was a balk, pointing out that Johnson was on the rubber when he bluffed the throw . . . "No balk," said Connolly, "he couldn't have been on the rubber. Nobody would be that dumb," and he winked at Johnson.

Bill Cox, deposed president of the Phillies, denies he made any fabulous profits when he sold his stock in the club, saying his investment netted him only 8 per cent . . . Mel Hein, eight-time All-League center with the New York Football Giants, is playing basketball in the Schenectady YMCA League and leading the league in scoring with a 22-point average . . . Tillie Manton, former place-kicking specialist of the Redskins, is now a talent scout for the Boston team in the National Football League . . . Clark Griffith has mailed 1944 contracts to 22 ball players and none contained a salary cut . . . along about April, 1945, the major leagues will vote another term as commissioner to Judge Landis, whose present contract will expire in that month . . . if Landis chooses to retire, his successor will be either a former Federal judge now in a high Government position, or United States Senator Scott Lucas from Illinois . . . Charley Wychunas, who played on the unbeaten, untied Georgetown team of 1938 and captained the 1939 eleven, is in a Japanese prison camp in the Philippines, his parents have been advised by the International Red Cross.

Connie Mack Sells Trio to Baltimore

Philadelphia, Jan. 22 (AP).—Owner-Manager Connie Mack of the Philadelphia Athletics announced tonight the outright sale of three players to the Baltimore Orioles of the International League.

Mack did not announce the amount of cash involved but it was believed to be approximately $10,000. The three are Felix Mackiewicz, a right-handed pitcher and outfielder; Francis Skaff, reserve infielder, and Sam Lowry, right-handed pitcher. Mackiewicz, a Purdue graduate, played with Baltimore last year; Skaff was with the A's and Lowry at Wilmington, Del., in the Interstate League.

Canadiens Score

Montreal, Jan. 22 (AP).—The Montreal Canadiens strengthened their lead on first place in the National Hockey League tonight by whipping the Boston Bruins, 6-2, in the first game of a weekend double-header.

Tigers' Rudy York 1-A, Ready to Go To Bat for Uncle

Cartersville, Ga., Jan. 22 (INS).—Rudy York, hard hitting Detroit outfielder, announced tonight he has been classified 1-A by his Selective Service Board and is ready "to go to bat for Uncle Sam."

"It looks like I've signed a contract with Uncle Sam for the duration," York declared.

He said he thought he would be inducted within the next 60 days.

"I have no choice of service and am willing to go wherever I can do the most good," he said. "I'm ready to enter the armed services and don't want a deferment."

York, who is married and the father of three children, lives during the winter season at his farm home, a short distance from Cartersville.

Tarheel Tankmen Defeat Navy, 39-36

Annapolis, Jan. 22 (AP).—Scoring first place in all but the 50-yard free style, the University of North Carolina swimming team won over the Navy Natators, 39-36 today.

Hammond, Wildman and Mallison of North Carolina broke the academy pool record of 3:00.5 in the 300-yard medley relay to take the opening event in 3:00.2.

Clyde Tolson Surprises to Pay $203.80

Miami, Fla., Jan. 22 (AP).—The 5-year-old Mar-Kell, top money winner for the Calumet Farm now that mighty Whirlaway has been retired, brought home a $4090 prize today with a smart triumph in Hialeah Park's Evening Handicap.

Six other fair-to-good fillies and mares yielded to the heavily loaded and heavily backed champion mare of 1943 in a 7-furlong dash before one of the largest crowds of the winter season.

Near Course Record

Billy Thompson had the bay thoroughbred out in front by a length and a half at the finish, and was pulling away from the field. Despite a burden of 126 pounds and a relatively soft track, Mar-Kell went the distance in 1 minute 26 seconds—3 3-5 seconds off the course record.

The Woolford Farm entry of Silvestra and Pig Tails took second and third, respectively.

Well-liked by the free-betting throng, Mar-Kell returned $4.70 for $2 to win, $2.80 to place and $2.60 to show. Silvestra and Pig Tails, hooked together in the parimutuel pool, paid $2.40 to place and $2.50 to show.

Trainer Ben Jones sent Mar-Kell to the post for the first time since October, but he had her in the pink. She was rated along in a contending position until the far turn was reached, then was taken to the outside and came home in a tremendous stretch drive.

Silvestra Kept Up All Way

Silvestra, enjoying a 14-pound pull in the weights, was kept up all the way, and was easily the class of the rest of the field. Pig Tails, carrying 110 pounds, was moving fast at the finish.

For the first time this winter, a 100-to-1 shot scored at Miami when Clyde Tolson, G. R. Watkins' former stakes performer, surprised a big field in a high-class claiming race.

The prices across the board were $203.80, $99 and $32.50.

All of Hialeah's profits for the day were turned over to the Dade County War Chest, the local central charity drive.

Adulator Scores

Woolford Farm's Adulator, winner of the Hialeah Inaugural but beaten last week in the Palm Beach Handicap, came back to take the secondary feature today—the $3000 Seminole Handicap.

Ridden by Ted Atkinson, Adulator went the seven furlongs in 1:25 4-5 to whip Eurasian by two lengths, by Poacher by another head.

Adulator paid $7.10, $3.30 and $2.30 across the board. Eurasian was $3.90 to place and $2.70 to show, and Poacher's show price was $2.50.

Amber Light Wins At New Orleans

New Orleans, Jan. 22 (AP).—Dixiana Farms' fleet colt, Amber Light, won the $3000 McDonough Handicap at the fair grounds track today, but was doing his best at the finish to hold a length advantage over Mrs. R. A. Coward's Frank's Boy.

O'Sullivan Farms' Pompeco ran third, 2½ lengths back of Frank's Boy.

Amber Light quickly opened a commanding lead on Frank's Boy and Many Lands, both of whom were in early pursuit. In the stretch Frank's Boy cut the winner's edge down by two lengths under a hard ride by Nick Jemas.

The winner paid $3.40 for $2 and traveled the 5½ furlongs in 1:06, carrying 118 pounds, considerably more weight than was assigned to either Frank's Boy or Pompeco.

Moon-Shooters' Dream Comes True—100-1 Shot Wins

Clyde Tolson, former stake horse and named for the popular FBI official, was placed in claiming company yesterday and surprised by winning at Hialeah Park at a $203.80 mutuel. Here he's shown in front at the finish. In close pursuit is Billy Rolfe with Zacatine in third position.

Tigers Rally To Beat Md. Five, 51 to 43

A scrappy, underdog Hampden-Sydney basketball team, which had won only 2 of 10 games, waged a spirited last-half rally last night to defeat the University of Maryland Cagers, 51-to-43, at Ritchie Coliseum.

The Virginians' attack was ably led by forward Bill Cantwell, who amassed a dozen points in the closing session to take scoring honors of the night with 19. Cantwell, a naval trainee at Hampden-Sydney, was a member of the George Washington frosh squad last season.

Tex Gaster, Tiger forward, whose floor play was instrumental in the Terps' downfall, also appeared locally last year as a member of the American University five.

Terps Offense Stopped

Hampden-Sydney played only par ball against Maryland in the initial period had a half-time one-point lead, 25-24. However, they sent a band of opportunists out for the closing period who took control of the floor play and decisively shackled the Maryland offense.

Gaster, Cantwell and Clarence Radar repeatedly pulled Maryland shots off the backboards and it was this ball-hawking that finally paid off. The Terrapins were given little scoring opportunity in the early portion of the period. An example of this was the fact that Maryland only accounted for three baskets in the first 10 minutes of the canto.

Bill Cantwell began finding the range early in the second session with close-in shots, and he was given assistance by Gaster and Radar.

Wild Passing Hurts

The Tigers, who dropped a 52-to 46 clash to the Quantico Marines Friday night, ran their margin up to 40-28, as the second period got under way before the Maryland offense could click.

Maryland was materially hampered throughout the game by wild passing and no follow-up on rebounds. Top man in the Black and Gold offense was little Joe Acito who ripped the cords for a total of 12 points. Close behind him were Dick Tuschak, with 10, and Jack Flynn with 9. Flynn's scoring was the prettiest of the game, all his baskets coming from set shots which arched in from some distance out.—OSCAR ELDER.

California to Act On Ritchie 'Boxing Is Racket' Charge

Los Angeles, Jan. 22 (AP).—Willie Ritchie, chief inspector for the California Boxing Commission's southern division, was assured today of a complete investigation of his charges that "rotten gamblers are running the game I love" as soon as he puts his claims in writing.

Ritchie, who has had his inspector's job since 1934, reiterated his general charges that "open gambling has made a racket of California boxing" which he made in a letter to Gov. Earl Warren earlier this week.

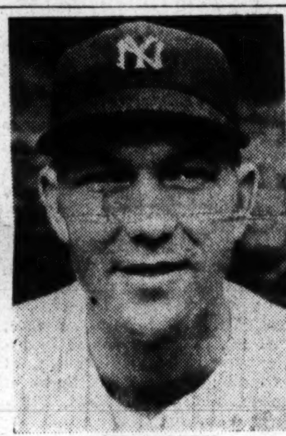
The former world lightweight champion said it would take 7 to 10 days to put his charges into writing, and Chairman Jules Covey declared the commission would conduct a complete investigation at that time.

Long Overdue

Veteran Bill Dickey Named Baseball's 'Man of the Year'

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—William Malcolm Dickey, the gangling Arkansan who has been a fixture as the New York Yankee catcher for 15 years, today was selected as the player of the year by the New York chapter of the Baseball Writers Association.

He will receive the award at the annual dinner of the chapter in New York's Hotel Commodore on Sunday, February 6.



BILL DICKEY

Dickey, fourteenth recipient of the trophy which last year went to Ted Williams of the Boston Red Sox, is the first catcher to make the grade.

Thirty-seven years old and a father, Dickey will report to Manager Joe McCarthy of the Yanks in March for his seventeenth campaign with the Bronx Bombers.

During the long career he established a major league mark for catching 100 or more games in 13 consecutive seasons and in addition holds numerous field and batting marks.

Although he played in only 85 games last season after being sidelined twice by injuries, he was third in the American League's batting roster with an average of .351. His prowess at the plate has enabled him to establish such marks as clouting three homers in a single game, July 26, 1939, and bashing homers with the bases loaded in consecutive games at the expense of the Chicago White Sox on August 3 and 4, 1937.

No Passed Balls

Generally regarded as the best of the modern-day receivers, Dickey is every bit as efficient on the defense as on the offensive.

He caught 125 games in 1931 without a passed ball, is coholder of the major league mark of making three assists in an inning and authored an unassisted double play with the St. Louis Browns the victims on June 8, 1941.

As a Yankee, his only major league connection, he has played in eight World Series and has represented the American League in actual play in seven All-Star games. In addition, he has been selected on the Sporting News' All-Major-League team six times.

St. Joseph's, N.Y.U. Win in Philly Games

Philadelphia, Jan. 22 (AP).—A sharpshooting gang of freshmen from St. Joseph's College turned "firehouse" ball against its inventor, Rhode Island State, tonight, and thereby recorded their eighth straight victory, 69-54.

A crowd of 10,349 watching the second game of the Convention Hall double-header after New York U. edged out Temple, 45-43, saw the Hawks and Rhode Island set a new one-game scoring record, with Forward Jack McEnroe of St. Joe's leading the pack with 28 points.

Rhode Island rolled up a 6-0 lead in the first few minutes, then St. Joe's came back to take the lead 7-6 and from there until midway of the second half it was a nip-and-tuck battle. The first half ended with St. Joe's ahead 31-28, and midway of the last period Rhode Island forged to the front at 43-41, but when Maher's field goal put the Hawks ahead at 44-43 they were there to stay, and widened the gap toward the finish.

Rhode Island's Enrie Calverly, the Nation's leading scorer, accounted for 26 points.

Ohio State Assistant Coach to Resign

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 22 (AP).—Paul Brown, head football coach at Ohio State University, announced that Hugh McGranahan, his assistant who has coached the guards for the last three years, had submitted his resignation effective March 1, when his contract terminates.

Brown said McGranahan planned to enter business.

"Mac" was graduated from Mt. Union College and coached at Detroit Tech and in Alliance (Ohio) high schools before joining Brown at Massillon High School in 1934.

Gallaudet's Rally Beats Eagles, 36-34

Bridgewater, Va., Jan. 22 (AP).—Gallaudet College of Washington overcame a Bridgewater cage team here tonight to win, 36-34, after the local team had held a scant edge at halftime.

Houff, Bridgewater center, led the Eagles' scoring with 13 points and Mitchell, a guard, was next with 12. Witczak, Gallaudet forward, led his team with nine.

Hoppe Wins Block, Leads 193 Points

Detroit, Jan. 22 (AP).—Willie Hoppe of New York, won the final two blocks here today from Welker Cochran of San Francisco, thus giving himself a 193-point margin to carry into New York next week for the final 300 points of their cross-country three-cushion billiards match.

Hoppe won tonight, 50-to-48, in 44 innings after taking the afternoon block, 50-to-26, in 37 innings. By winning 10 out of 12 blocks on the Detroit table, Hoppe seized a 600-to-490 margin here and an 1850-to-1657 edge for the entire series. The earlier portions were played at Kansas City and Chicago.

Rudy York Is 1-A

Cartersville, Ga., Jan. 22 (AP).—Rudy York, Detroit first baseman and winner of the American League runs-batted-in title for 1943 with 118, has been classified 1-A in the draft, Dr. H. P. McElreath, local board chairman, said tonight.

Hulse, Hunter Win in AAU Track Events

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—Bill Hulse and Oliver Hunter, newest stars of the indoor track season, cantered to easy victories in the one and three-mile events tonight at the Metropolitan AAU Track Meet which was decided on the flat, cannon-studded floor of the Thirteenth Regiment Armory.

Hulse brought cheers from the less than a thousand spectators by hitting the tape in 4:15.6 for the shorter distance, finishing some 10 yards in front of defending champion James Rafferty.

Hunter, ticking along with the regularity of a dollar watch, puffed through the longer distance in 14:24.4 and finished 220 yards ahead of Clayton Farrer, the U. S. Coast Guard running machine.

In between those two races a War Bond sprint was held in which a $25 bond pushed the "runner" five yards along the 1000-yard course. Ensign Greg Rice of the U. S. Maritime Service, was an easy winner and $50,475 worth of bonds were sold.

The New York University contingent won the team title with 36 points. The New York A. C., holder of the banner for the past 12 years, was next with 35½. Columbia's Midshipmen were third with 30½.

Hunter, now an ensign at the Columbia Midshipman's School, pounded 24 times around the unbanked oval, and led all the way. Lieut. Joe McCluskey of the U. S. Navy, was second for the first half mile before dropping to third. He drew abreast of Farrar again with two laps to go but fell back in the final sprint.

Hulse moved out in front at the start, but was dogged by Rudy Simms, young New York University runner, through the first six laps. On the seventh, Hulse barged into a 5-yard lead and increased it to 10 yards on the final spin around the oval.

It was the second straight win on the boards for the youngster who hopped into the limelight last summer by chasing Gunder Hagg. Last week, running in rubber-soled shoes, he was clocked in 4:23.4. Tonight the competitors wore short spikes.

Hulse reached the quarter-mile in 0:61.5, the half in 2:07 and the three-quarter station in 3:12.2. Rafferty sprinted to second place on the final lap.

Lawrence Schmidt of Columbia pulled a mild upset in defeating Al Daily of the New York A. C., former Manhattan College athlete, by jumping into the lead only a few strides from the finish line of the 1000-yard run. Prior to that, Daily led all the way. The winner's time was 2:21.8.

Ray Ramsey, who represented Bradley Tech of Peoria, Ill., before joining the Navy, bounced to victory in the 70-yard high hurdles in the good time of :09.1 seconds, hitting the tape only inches in front of teammate John C. Jones.

Howard Callanan, famous halfback for the Southern California football team last fall but now also stationed at the Columbia Midshipmen's School, was relegated to third in the 60-yard sprint behind Ed Conwell and Herb Rubin, both of New York University. The time was :06.6. Callanan won his semi-final heat in :06.8.

Tech Tankmen Win

By Tom Moore McBride

Coolidge High bowed for the first time in the interhigh series last night as Roosevelt's Bunny Citrenbaum put the finishing touch on a thrilling neck-and-neck battle that ended in a 30-29 overtime victory for the Riders. Western defeated Anacostia, 41-16, in the Tech gym opener.

As a result of last night's games, these interesting developments came to the fore in the series:

1. Eastern and Western were tied for the series lead, with three victories and one loss apiece, and Coolidge, with two on the credit side and one on the debit, dropped to second place.

2. Western's Ray Love, a hard-plunging forward, took over single-game scoring honors from Pete Panturis, as he dropped them in the bucket for 20 points.

Opener Is Thriller

The Coolidge-Roosevelt opener was a thriller from the start, and if ever a team played over its head, Roosevelt did. The Rough Riders looked like a cannon cracker in this game, like the piece of punk that lit it in their defeat by Western last week. Bunny Citrenbaum, who didn't have much help in his previous outings, had plenty last night in the floor play of Sid Drazin and Pete Loomis and Loomis' and Lou Macuilla's point-making.

The Roosevelt men dominated the play throughout the first half, scoring with unbelievable shots from the center of the floor and snagging the ball from Coolidge men with alarming—for the Colts—regularity. They led at the half, 21-12.

It was a different story in the third quarter, for Addie Bassin broke loose, and except for two foul points by his teammate, Paul Sickle, accounted for all the scoring to bring the score to 22-25.

Bassin Banished

All of Bassin's scoring was in that period, however, for he only had time to sink one foul shot in the final quarter before he was disqualified for "unsportsmanlike conduct" for arguing with the referee. George Lafferty tied the score for Coolidge at 25-all, with a long one, and Lou Weinstein put Coolidge ahead with a beautiful running shot under the basket. But there were other Louies at work for Roosevelt. Lou Macuilla sank a foul shot and Lou Mulitz came through with a field goal to put the Riders in the lead. The Colts' Joe Laing tied it up with a foul shot just before the final gun.

In the overtime Lafferty put Coolidge ahead with two minutes to go on a foul, but Bunny Citrenbaum broke up the game in the last 30 seconds of play with a long field goal that made it 30-29.

Western Takes Lead

There wasn't much doubt about the outcome of the Western-Central game after the end of the first quarter, when Western led, 5-0. The Red Raiders were busting up Central's pat scoring formula from the outset, and only in the second quarter, when Panturis managed some long shots was there any real competition.

The one factor that made the game interesting in the second half was the uncertainty as to how many points Western's Ray Love would be able to score. The agile forward didn't play the entire game, or he might have made more, but his 20 points easily top the series single-game scoring. The 41-16 score indicates just how unexciting a ball game it was.

Young Kid McCoy To Retire From Ring

Detroit, Jan. 22 (AP).—Adam Pianga, who as Young Kid McCoy was a big winner in the welterweight division, announced today his retirement from the ring because of a kidney ailment, which recently brought about his discharge from the Army. He is 24 years old.

In five years as a pro, Pianga won 46 fights, lost seven and had four draws. In his last fight he was stopped by Fritzie Zivic of Pittsburgh last summer for the only knockout of his career.

Ensign Keller Dons Maritime Service's Uniform in Florida

St. Petersburg, Fla., Jan. 22 (AP).—The New York Yankees' Charley (King Kong) Keller traded uniforms today and wished for big league baseball "a good season this year."

The former outfielder donned the maritime uniform with the rank of ensign at the St. Petersburg maritime service base's athletic training department.

Young Leola Thomas Points To Tank Fame, Hollywood

Blonde, blue-eyed Leola Thomas, the 15-year-old aquabelle of the Ambassador Swimming Club, is pointing toward her top season of competitive swimming. The pretty Anacostia High School sophomore, who in a mere two years of competition has annexed one junior national crown plus myriad local AAU titles, served effective notice of this intent recently when she won the Middle Atlantic AAU 220-yard free style from favored Judy Auritt in Philadelphia.

However, the recording of a Thomas tank triumph is strictly a "dog-bites-man" story—no news value whatsoever—inasmuch as Leola has thusly broken into print with monotonous regularity since the winter of 1941.

Because She Likes It

In her two years of swimming she has won 61 medals and five trophies. She likes swimming. She must like it for she religiously puts in two hours of hard practice at it every afternoon at the Ambassador pool. This diligence has borne fruit, for in addition to being the Junior National 880-yard free style champion, Leola also currently holds the record for this event. She clipped some five seconds off the old mark when she won the title at Tarboro, N. C., last summer.

Locally, Miss Thomas holds three District of Columbia AAU women's senior records—the 150-yard medley, indoor and outdoor, and the 100-yard backstroke. The backstroke mark, incidently, is her proudest feat for this was her first senior record and in setting it she defeated the holder of the mark.

Set Six Junior Marks

Before stepping into the senior division of the AAU Leola established six marks in winning junior championships for the 100-yard breast stroke, back stroke and free style, both indoor and outdoor.

Swimming is a serious business with the youngster and she packs a lot of stamina and determination in her 5 feet 3 inches and 123 pounds. She's a fighter from the starting gun and it is significant that she has come through the wake to win a lot of her races.

However, she admits that swimming is simply a springboard to a bigger ambition—she hopes to become a national swimmng champion in order to get to Hollywood to become a movie star.

Landon Wins In Two Sports

Landon School won in two fields of sport against St. James Prep of Baltimore yesterday, defeating the visitors 19-14 at basketball and 6-1 at soccer.

In the basketball game, Carol Smith carried the scoring load for the home team with eight points, while George Simpson was top scorer in the soccer match with three goals. Neither the Landon cagers nor the Landon kickers were in trouble in either of their games, leading 11-5 at the half in basketball, and leading, 4-0, at the end of the first quarter at soccer.

Perrusos-Marine Game Feature in Heurich's League

Action aplenty is expected tonight in the Heurich Basketball League. The United States Marine Headquarters five, out of the running for the first half title, will meet the Perrusos Cafe team. The latter club must win to gain a tie and a play-off crack at the FBI five. In league competition, FBI had won 10 and lost 1 while Perrusos had won 9 and lost 1. Should the Cafemen win tonight, they will clash with FBI tomorrow night.

Two other games are on the program tonight. At 7 p. m., FBI plays Andy Farkas' Engineer Research Club. Following the featured Marines-Perrusos clash, the United Typists will meet the Jacobsen Florists.

Basketball at Heurich's begins with afternoon play of girls' teams. War Department versus Marinettes, 2 p. m.; Scholls Cafe versus United Typists at 3 p. m. and Camp Springs versus Gallaudet at 4 p. m. is the schedule.

The Yellow Mask Faces Don Evans In Rassle Feature

The Yellow Mask, mysterious hooded grappler, and Don Evans, sensational Pacific Coast matman, will headline Wednesday night's show at Turner's Arena, a portion of the gate receipts to be turned over to the Mile-of-Dimes campaign in the fight against infantile paralysis.

The Mask and Evans will clash in a finish bout that promises to set a new high in mayhem.

Bullis Prep Beats Naval Air, 44-42

Bullis Prep traveled to the Naval Air Station and defeated the Sailors there, 44-42, yesterday. After the score was 10-all at the end of the first period, Bullis stepped out and held sway thereafter despite a determined rally by the home club. Scott, Sheppard and Burkhart did most of the scoring for Bullis while Wojszynski (honest) led the Sailors with 16 points.

Pitchers Haefner, Curtis First Nats to Sign

Mickey Third In League on Earned Runs

Pitchers Mickey Haefner and Vernon Curtis became the first Nats under contract for next season when the mails yesterday brought their acceptance of 1944 salary terms to President Clark Griffith.

Among pitchers who won more than 10 games last year, little Haefner was third in the league on an earned-run basis with an average of 2.29 earned runs per game. He won 11 and lost 5 for the Nats and his new contract contained a "generous" pay raise.

Rookie Curtis, bought from the Atlanta club late in the season for $20,000, pitched in only two games for the Nats for a total of four innings, but he is regarded as a fixture on the 1944 staff.

He's a Night Owl

Haefner's performance stamped him as one of the outstanding rookies of 1943. He was bought by the Nats from Minneapolis. He shared with Oral Grove of the White Sox the honor of winning more night games (six) than any other hurler.

Clark Griffith disclosed also that First Baseman Joe Kuhel soon would sign his 1944 contract. In a letter to Griffith, Kuhel wrote, "I'll be in better condition than I was with the White Sox last year when I was bothered by the need of an operation. I'm a better hitter than my .213 average shows."

Receipt of the signed contracts of Haefner and Curtis reveals that others among the Nats have been laggard in accepting terms offered despite the fact no pay cuts were given.

Case in Demanding Mood

If Griffith encounters any trouble in signing players, it may center about George Case who expects a whopping increase as a result of his productive season in 1943.

Griffith dispatched some of his holdout troubles when he traded Buck Newsom to the Athletics in December. In the past, the chief holdout gestures usually were made by Pitcher Dutch Leonard, who has been classified 1-A and is awaiting a call for Army induction.

Tigers Announce Spring Schedule

Detroit, Jan. 22 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers announced today a nine-game spring exhibition schedule with the Pittsburgh Pirates and the Chicago Cubs and White Sox. Play will be limited to weekends.

The Tigers report March 14 at Evansville, Ind., and start the exhibition series 11 days later.

The schedule: March 25-26, Chicago White Sox at Evansville; April 1-2, Chicago Cubs at Evansville; April 8-9, Pittsburgh at Evansville; April 14, Pittsburgh at Muncie, Ind.; April 15-16, Pittsburgh at Detroit.

Hopeful Browns Mail 33 Contracts

St. Louis, Jan. 22 (AP).—Contracts are being mailed to 33 players by the St. Louis Browns, Vice President William O. Dewitt said tonight in announcing the club had decided to open spring training at Cape Girardeau, Mo., on March 10.

Pitchers and catchers will report on that date and the rest of the squad will follow on March 13, giving the team almost five weeks of conditioning before the season starts.

The Browns' roster includes 15 pitchers, 5 catchers, 7 infielders and 6 outfielders, but Dewitt was doubtful if all would be available because of the draft situation.

Baltimore Five, With 7 Straight, Plays Bears Today

A large delegation of court fans from Baltimore, following the fortunes of their undefeated Mets, will see the clash between this former Morgan College champion combination and the pro champion Lichtman Bears at Turner's Arena this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

The Mets boast a seven-game winning streak this year. Their line-up will include both "Duece" and "Skippy" Gibson, trick-shot artists, and the former Bison ace, Maurice Jackson. Jumping center will be the former Armstrong star, "Sugar" Cain, who accounted for 16 points in the last clash between these teams.

In four defeats during the past two years at the hands of the Bears, the Mets have caused the local combination to play an uphill game to the final whistle. Coach "Tarzan" Cooper will start the favorite combination of King, Isaacs, Gates, Bell, Clayton.

Coast Guard Breaks YMCA Five's Streak

The Coast Guard five broke an 11-game winning registered by the YMCA team last night, winning by a 39-27 count in a battle on the "Y" court. Inability of the home club to stop Bastin, the Guards' 6-foot, 8-inch center, cost them the game. Bastin made 21 points. The victory evens the series between the rivals, the "Y" having won, 32-30, in overtime in the first clash.

Buck Newsom and his bride, the former Kay Griffiths, of McKeesport, Pa. They were in Washington en route from her home to Darlington, S. C., where they will live. Mrs. Newsom met the pitcher, now with the A's, when she was a songstress at the Wardman Park Hotel here.

Indians Cross Fingers, Mail 28 Contracts

Cleveland, Jan. 22 (AP).—Roger Peckinpaugh, vice president of the Cleveland Indians, announced today contracts were mailed to 28 prospective members of the 1944 Tribe roster.

Two other contracts, those of Coach Del Baker and Outfielder Oris Hockett, were signed last fall. Manager Lou Boudreau will guide the Tribe for his third year. The coming season is the second under a three-year contract he signed a year ago.

Peckinpaugh said the 31-man roster represented his "hopes" rather than his expectations. Uncle Sam, through Selective Service, likely will make changes in the list before the team gathers for spring training March 13 at Lafayette, Ind.

Catchers—Buddy Rosar, Gene Desautels, Jim McDonnell, Jim Devlin.

The Indians, who will do their spring training at Lafayette, Ind., today announced a schedule which will include 14 exhibition games.

March 26, Pittsburgh, at Muncie. April 2, Cincinnati, at Indianapolis; 4, Pittsburgh, at Lafayette; 5-6, Pittsburgh, at Muncie; 8-9, Indianapolis, at Lafayette; 10-12, Pittsburgh, at Indianapolis; 13, Cincinnati, at Richmond, Ind.; 14, Cincinnati, at Dayton, Ohio; 15-16, Cincinnati, at Cincinnati.

Kell Hit .396 For Organized Baseball Title

Durham, N. C., Jan. 22 (AP).—The 1943 batting champion of organized baseball is Infielder George Kell, who smashed out a .396 average as an infielder with the Lancaster Red Roses of the Class B Interstate League.

After checking all final official averages, minor league press headquarters disclosed that Kell had a 27-point margin on his closest competitors, Hal Gruber of Bristol in the Appalachian League, and Ben Visan of Batavia in the Pony League, each of whom batted .369 in Class D competition.

Kell has been promoted to the Philadelphia Athletics for the 1944 season. He will be presented with a full-sized sterling silver bat as the 1943 winner of the tenth annual Louisville Slugger Trophy.

Starting with the 1933 season, the trophy has been offered each year to the minor league player with the highest batting average, provided he participated in at least 75 per cent of his team's games. Inasmuch as his figure topped the leaders in the two majors as well as the minors, Kell is the 1943 swat monarch.

Rangers Rout Leafs

Toronto, Jan. 22 (AP).—The National Hockey League's cellar-dwelling New York Rangers tonight trounced the second place Toronto Maple Leafs, 5-1, before 10,735 fans for their second win in the eight games the two teams have played this season. Both New York wins have been on Toronto ice.

District AAU Ring Tourney Opens Feb. 4

The District AAU boxing tournament, one of the town's top winter sports attractions, will open Friday, February 4, at Turner's Arena, Billy Blake, chairman of the boxing committee, announced last night. It will run five successive weeks, ending with championship bouts for both novice and senior classes March 3.

Blake selected the opening date, which is earlier than usual, to permit the entry of Golden Gloves champions, who are slated to fight in the Eastern championships at New York the second week in March. This move is expected to bring all Golden Gloves champions into the tournament, which Blake hopes will attract approximately 100 youngsters.

The tourney will be divided into novice and senior classes, ranging from bantamweights to heavyweights.

Chairman Joe Aronoff of the AAU registration committee, last night said the tournament will be restricted to boys living within the 15-mile radius under the Dstrict union's supervision. This ruling automatically bars men from military posts in Maryland and Virginia, excepting those in the immediate vicinity.

Servicemen eligible to compete may obtain entry blanks from their post athletic officers, to whom the blanks have been mailed. Local fighters can get theirs from their club coaches or at the District Boxing Commission beginning tomorrow. Entries will close at the boxing commission office February 2, at 8:30 p. m.

Novice fighters will weigh in at the ring commission the same night, and will have the honor of opening the tournament two nights later. All entrants must be registered in the A.A.U. and cards will be available for those boys not having them.

Seven local clubs are expected to battle it out for the team championships, including the new Mount Rainier Club, coached by Ray Nally. Others and their coaches are: Apollo, Glenn Drake; Pete's A.C., Pete Mancini; St. Mary's, Naiman Massey; Boys Club of Washington, Lou Gevinson; Merrick, Lou Hanbury and Lou Jameson, and National Training School, Bill McKeever.

Wilson Jayvees Win

The Wilson High Jayvees defeated Western's Jayvees, 38-17, with Monty Morgan's 13 points leading the attack.

Williams 9-5 Favorite In Bout With Buffalo

Holman Williams, the classy middleweight now ranked at the number two active fighter in his class by the National Boxing Association, makes his third showing at Turner's Arena since last October when he boxes Gene Buffalo, the transplanted Philly boxer, in a feature 10-rounder tomorrow night.

Williams, who last season whipped through an unsullied record, and in many quarters is regarded as the "uncrowned" world's champion, has been installed a 9-5 favorite to topple Buffalo.

Buffalo is no soft pickings for any middleweight, for his record shows that he is undefeated in the last two years and also that he holds a couple of decisions over Fritzie Zivic, the former world's welterweight champion.

Williams may run into a storm of trouble tomorrow, whereas in his last two local appearances at the Arena he had something of a "breeze." Sergt. Joe Louis' protege won 10 out of 10 rounds from John Garner, the D. C. middleweight and light heavyweight titlerholder. He won virtually every round in the 10 from Tee Hubert, the District middleweight champion, a few weeks ago.

In Philadelphia he beat Steve Belloise, winning 9 out of 10 rounds, which means that Williams in his last three matches has lost but 1 round out of 30—quite a record.

Williams has been one of the most active middleweights in the game today, and the success of his campaign in the next few months will determine whether he will reign as the "duration" titleholder. Though not a great hitter, Williams is a good puncher. He beat Lloyd Marshall, who recently decisioned Nate Bolden. Buffalo is a fast scrapper, with plenty of confidence, and never has lost a match in the District.

Jimmy Bell, promising light-heavyweight, will box Jimmy Nelson, Norfolk, in a 6-rounder; George Williams will tackle Tommy Mollis, Baltimore vet, in a six, and Harry Diduck will take on Georgie Farrell in a six.

8 Washington Skaters Vie At Lake Placid

Washington will be represented by eight ice skaters in the 1944 Eastern Sectional Figure Skating championships, to be held at Lake Placid, New York, January 28-29. The winners of this competition will meet Mid-West and Pacific Coast champions in the United States National Championships at Minneapolis, February 24-26.

From Washington, Walter H. Bainbridge, jr., and Carleton C. Hoffner, jr., will compete in the men's novice singles. Hoffner and Ann Davies are entered in the junior pair, and Vernon Duckett and Marjoribanks Dove and Vivian Halliday and Dr. John Daimon of the Saranac Lake Club, are paired to compete for the senior dance crown.

A trio of local couples—Robert Elbourn and Vera Halliday, Walter H. Bainbridge, jr., and Margaret H. Parker, and Carleton C. Hoffner, jr.—are entered in the junior dance.

Hal Roach to Talk At Touchdown Club Luncheon Tuesday

Lieut. Col. Hal Roach, USA, world famous producer of motion pictures, will be guest of honor at the weekly luncheon of The Touchdown Club at 12:30 p. m. Tuesday.

Colonel Roach's "Our Gang" comedies and other contributions have been popular on the screen over a long span of years.

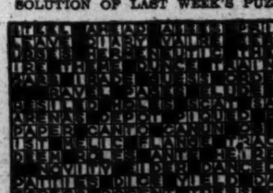
SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE



Capital Banks' Bond Holdings Up 133 Million

By S. Oliver Goodman

Portfolios of the 22 Washington banks held $416,259,000 worth of Government securities as of December 31, 1943, as compared with $283,148,000 at the end of the previous year, according to a report yesterday by Comptroller of Currency Preston Delano.

In the same period local banks experienced a decline of $11,735,000 in loans to private business. As of December 31, total loans aggregated $106,789,000 against $118,524,000 at the end of 1942.

Despite the sharp increase in holdings of low-interest Federal securities and the drop in the more remunerative private loans, undivided profits of the banks advanced during the year from $10,167,000 to $10,533,000.

Aggregate assets jumped to $761,720,000, as compared with $657,455,000 at the end of 1942. Other highlights of Mr. Delano's report, comparing figures at the end of 1943 with those at the end of 1942:

Cash $13,949,000 against $15,386,000; demand deposits $455,528,000 against $403,567,000; time deposits $141,085,000 against $130,834,000; Government deposits and postal savings $62,902,000 against $18,706,000; total deposits $707,687,000 against $604,296,000; surplus $20,450,000 against $19,803,000; undivided profits $10,533,000 against $10,167,000.

Two new members were elected to the committee of the Washington Clearing House Association, it was announced yesterday. They are Wilmer J. Waller, president of Hamilton National Bank, and Howard Moran, vice president of American Security & Trust Co., succeeding Frank J. Stryker and C. F. Jacobsen.

H. H. McKee, president of the East Washington Savings Bank, was reelected chairman of the association, and Victor B. Deyber, chairman of the board of Second National Bank, was reelected for his 21st term as secretary.

All other officers and committee members of the clearing house were reelected.

Johnson Joins Studebaker

Courtney Johnson, long time automotive executive, has been named assistant to the chairman of the board of the Studebaker Corporation. Johnson has most recently been a war contract representative for Studebaker in Washington. He is chairman of the materials control committee of the Automotive Council for War Production. In his new post Johnson will operate on special assignments from H. S. Vance, board chairman, dividing his time between Washington and company offices in South Bend, Ind.

Bankers' Group to Meet

The safe deposit section of the District Bankers Association will meet Tuesday at 6:30 p. m. in the Lee Sheraton Hotel. Mrs. Florence Warner will preside and R. H. Mittendorff, an amateur magician, will entertain.

Vaught in New Post

W. J. Vaught, for the past nine years manager of the Washington office of the Investors Syndicate, has joined the local agency of the Guardian Life Insurance Company. Mr. Vaught is a past president of the Washington Civitan Club.

Managers Honor Montgomery

In tribute to William Montgomery, president of the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co. who has just marked his fiftieth anniversary as directing head of the company, the Acacia branch managers, here attending a three-day meeting, yesterday presented Mr. Montgomery with a large oil portrait of himself.

The presentation took place at a luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel. The portrait is the work of John C. Johansen of New York, a nationally noted artist.

The presentation was made to Mr. Montgomery by Roland Suter, Batlimore manager, who said that "it has been your leadership during the past 50 years that has brought Acacia to its present preeminent position."

During the course of the meetings, concluded yesterday, the branch managers pledged to equal in 1944 the record established during 1943, which was Mr. Montgomery's Golden Anniversary year. The meetings were conducted under the general supervision of Samuel E. Mooers, field vice president. During the sessions the managers were addressed by Mr. Montgomery, Mr. Mooers; Howard W. Kacy, first vice president; Lloyd K. Crippen, vice president and actuary; E. M. Thore, general counsel; and other officers and managers.

Investing Firm Seeks Retirement of Preferred

New York, Jan. 22 (AP)—American Superpower Corp., public utility investment company, today announced an offer to exchange its holdings of 70,000 shares of Consolidated Edison Co. of New York and 30,000 shares of American Gas & Electric Co. common stock for its own first preferred shares outstanding.

The company offered five shares of Consolidated Edison plus $2 in cash for one share of Superpower first preferred and four shares of American Gas plus $3.25 in cash for one share of Superpower preferred.

Dividend Is Resumed

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—The H. F. Wilcox Oil & Gas Co. today declared a dividend of 10 cents a common share, payable March 1 to stockholders of record February 4, first dividend since February of 1940 when a similar amount was paid.

Ford's Grandson Named Vice President of Firm

Detroit, Jan. 22 (AP).—The selection of Henry Ford 2d as a vice president of the Ford Motor Co., was announced at the company offices here today. He is the son of the late Edsel Ford and grandson of Henry Ford, founder of the motor company.

The announcement said the 26-year-old Ford, already a member of the board of directors, will devote considerable attention to the development of the distribution and sales department.

Narrow Moves Tend Upward In Stock Deals

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—The stock market today was a shade higher on balance after a week devoted almost entirely to buying of rails and specialties.

While advances were limited to small fractions generally in the short Saturday session, there were a few liquor gainers of a point or so. Plus marks were well distributed at the close but numerous issues were a shade lower or without any variation at all.

The share division held to a narrow area throughout the six-day stretch. The list maintained its equilibrium Monday in the face of the Moscow rumor of British-German peace feelers. Except for carriers and assorted industrials, trends still were cloudy Tuesday as Wall Street turned virtually all of its attention to the record war loan drive. Daily volumes were around 800,000 shares or under.

Earnings, actual and prospective, spurred individual stocks. The transportation section seemingly was buoyed by the wage settlement, return of the roads to private ownership and the outlook for heavy traffic even if the European conflict should end suddenly. Helpful also was the thought that the big payroll boost would be partly offset by relief from excess profits taxes.

The Associated Press 60-stock average was up .1 of a point at 51, a peak since October 28, and on the week showed a net increase of .2. The rail composite advanced .8 for the week to 25.5, highest mark since last July 29. Transfers totaled 520,510 for the two hours compared with 661,940 last Saturday.

Strength of railway loans was the feature of the week's bond dealings. The advance continued today. At Chicago wheat was unchanged to off ⅜ of a cent a bushel. N. Y. cotton jumped 80 cents to $1.05 a bale.

New Production Record Expected In Steel Plates

New York, Jan. 22 (AP).—A new production record in steel plate output is expected this month, steel sources reported, passing the peak of 1,169,196 tons reached in December. Shipyards are still getting the bulk of plate production, but railroads and car builders are receiving increasing quantities. Sheet demand is easing and trade circles report further cancellations.

Pig iron was reported to be in ample supply. The scrap situation has improved and most steel making centers are said to have an adequate supply on hand.

An improved consumption picture for copper is expected by the industry for February.

Growing excess stocks of zinc are expected to ease restrictions on civilian use of the metal. The American Zinc Institute this week reported that substitution and conservation measures were being reviewed. It reported that stocks of zinc at smelters reached a new top at the end of 1943.

'44 Auto Output Seen as Unlikely

Detroit, Jan. 22 (AP).—Prospects for passenger automobile production in 1944 look anything but bright to John H. Middlekamp, director of the War Production Board's automotive division.

He made that clear to newsmen at a press conference when he emphasized the size and importance of the 1944 truck production program and the fact that nothing at present justified an expectation that rationing of highway gasoline and tires could be terminated this year.

The 1944 truck program calls for one million vehicles, of which but 81,366 have been allocated for essential civilian use.

Regarding possible passenger automobile production this year, he said:

"We are all concerned about the problem of winning the war. Military truck equipment is our immediate problem.

"At present passenger car production is not in the picture."

Lumber Production Shows Smaller Drop

Lumber production in November totaled 2,870,765,000 board feet, of 1.7 per cent under October, the War Production Board reported yesterday. The output represented a much smaller seasonal decrease than is normal.

The November production brought the total for 11 months of 1943 to 30,822,150,000 feet, less than two million feet under the production estimate for the full year. The production, however, was more than four million feet short of estimated lumber needs for war and other essential uses for the year.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Jan. 22 (AP).—Grains tended to ease in a dull market today, commission house selling sending rye down for the largest losses. Most traders remained on the sidelines in view of the week-end holiday and the new Allied invasion of Italy. Weather was clear in most sections of the wheat belt.

At the start wheat displayed a little strength, traders expressing disappointment that offerings of the cash grain in the past few days were not as large as expected. However, the bread cereal turned lower when selling developed in rye. Oats and barley were little changed.

At the close wheat was unchanged to ⅜ lower, May 1.70¾, oats were ⅛-¼ lower, May 78¼, rye was down ¼-¾, May 1.29⅛-¼, and barley was ½ higher, September 1.19.

Court Refuses to Ease Pullman Antitrust Order

Philadelphia, Jan. 22 (AP).—A three-judge U. S. District Court declined today to modify its antitrust order breaking up the interlocking business relationship of the four Pullman sleeping car companies.

By unanimous vote, the judges rejected a Pullman group petition that the relationship be permitted to continue after the elimination of "exclusive dealing features" of its contracts with railroad companies.

Postwar 'Personalized Bathroom' Fits Into Any 16-Square-Foot Space

Easily ordered as a suit or dress and simply installed in a closet's space is a "personalized bathroom" now reported under consideration by the National Home Builders Bureau in its search for new ideas in the postwar home.

This break for the home owner and one of the improvements that are waiting postwar manufacture is a small, functional bathroom designed by Frank J. Zavada.

"Bath-ettes," as these are also designated, can be installed in any 16-square-foot space in a matter of hours. Any large closet space can be turned into a combination unit tub-shower, lavatory and closet. The fixtures merge with the walls. Concealed piping is built into each assembly unit.

Accessories include folding mirrors over the medicine cabinet, an electric heater or sun lamps, fluorescent lighting, fresh air supplied by blower-type fan and exhaust, three outlets, interchangeable head pieces for shampoo or baby wash, children's shower or foot shower and a head for cleaning fixtures.

Other Conveniences

This personalized bathroom also features other built-in conveniences, such as towel racks and storage space. The marine entrance door has a dry goods compartment, is above floor level and over an elongated drain with an overflow lid that swings downward on to the floor, which can be turned into a tub by taking out the snugly-fitted rubber mat.

Estimated to cost less than one-half that of a regulation bathroom, this bathette may also be had in any color or combination of colors, to match adjoining rooms. Either stainless steel or porcelain enamel on steel may be used in its construction, to blend with the basic design of the house.

As easily ordered as a new suit of clothes, this compact bathroom promises to be available at little cost so that everyone can have his own individual unit. It will be no longer necessary to wait until the younger children are put to bed to get your evening bath, and the room can be stocked with your own personal belongings.

Remote farm houses and small apartments alike will be able to install bathettes as soon as steel is again allocated for civilian use. Bathrooms cease to be a luxury for the rich with the development of this theory of Mr. Zavada, a postwar plan which will help to prepare the way for the coming revolution of architecture.

No Useless Gadgets

Besides bringing extra bathrooms into the price range of a modest householder, the design is attractive, adding to the beauty of the modern home, and utilizes all the latest conveniences. Every inch is made to work and "gadgets for gadgets' sake" are eliminated.

If you have an attic or even a section of a bedroom which is dead space you can raise the value of your home by putting in this square bathette, in line with the twentieth century's idea of beauty plus utility. Seen as an interesting example of structural interior decoration, it undoubtedly will be widely adopted by builders and long-time home owners alike. Mr. Zavada is an industrial designer with the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp.

2 D. C. Builders See Cheaper, Better Homes

The present time is not too early for facts on the average-cost postwar home and Practical Builder magazine presents, among others, the views of two local builders given in a recent survey by that publication. They are Robert P. Tiffey and C. W. Farrier.

According to Mr. Tiffey, "in spite of the modern exteriors of most recent row house projects, regular proven materials are used and increased amounts of glass, both flat and block, will be featured." Mr. Tiffey stressed the importance "for all builders to construct so that maintenance expense is reduced to a minimum, using proven materials."

Mr. Farrier says, in part, "The most certain forecast is no sudden, complete change in home construction. New materials will influence house construction. Pipe fittings will need no threading. Increased pressure will make joints tighter. Heavy electric wiring will permit greater loads." . . .

Views On Prefabrication

He believes that while large-scale finished-house prefabrication is technically possible, it is economically impractical because; (1) completed houses are too difficult to transport any great distance from factory to site, (2) quantity production demands counterpart of quantity sales, effective distribution organization, the automobile industry having taken years to do it.

House construction plans for the postwar era, without doubt, will permit production of standard-sized elements in many different plants for assembling later into houses with several different types of accommodations, he thinks.

The magazine states that like builders all over the country, these men are in accord with the timeliness of its postwar house survey. This study, including statements of selected builders from coast to coast, it explains, is aimed at cutting through the confusing ideas about "push-button" houses, adding, it presents plain facts about the comforts and conveniences the average cost postwar home can actually contain.

Improvements Sought

It is important, says the publication that people who plan to build should realize their builders have been working on sound improvements which will make a better home at lower cost.

"As soon as materials are available, these builders are ready to go to work. Far from being a fantastic mechanism—as many have seen pictured—the low cost post-

The Week in REAL ESTATE

By Thomas M. Cahill

Last month's volume of applications to finance and build war housing under the Title VI program of Federal Housing Administration was slightly higher than November's and about double that for December, 1942, Commissioner Abner H. Ferguson announced yesterday. This program is confined to private financing and construction of war housing.

FERGUSON

During December, Ferguson said, private financial institutions filed with FHA field offices applications for Title VI mortgage insurance amounting to $59,548,100 to finance construction of 13,103 projected new family dwelling units for war-workers. This compared with applications of $59,537,800 for 12,972 units in November and $30,450,600 for 7975 units in December, 19424.

Of last month's volume, applications for mortgage insurance to finance construction of houses for one to four families amounted to $53,516,300, and involved 11,685 dwelling units. Applications for mortgage insurance to finance construction of large-scale rental projects amounted to $6,031,800 for 12 proposed projects providing 1418 dwelling units.

Urban Land Meeting

Hugh Potter, Houston, Tex., was reelected president of the Urban Land Institute at a meeting last week at Mayflower Hotel. Arthur W. Binns, Philadelphia, was elected vice president; Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, was renamed corporate secretary, and Kenneth E. Rice, Chicago, reelected treasurer.

Trustees of the institute reaffirmed policies of its original plan for acquisition of blighted urban areas and their redevelopment by private enterprise. They also considered practicability of this program being handled by city, State or Federal governments.

U. S. Builders Disapprove D.C. Slum Loan

Disapproval of National Capital Housing Authority's urging a 100-million-dollar authorization for rebuilding local slums at this time was expressed yesterday by 75 directors and committee members of the National Association of Home Builders at close of a five-day conference on housing for war and postwar years at Statler Hotel.

Explaining the latter part of the meeting was devoted to discussions regarding ability of private enterprise to supply postwar housing for all income groups. Robert P. Gerholz, president of the association, said, "Although the war is far from won and we believe it most untimely for public interest and congressional activity to be devoted to the subject of public housing, the current activities of the National Capital Housing Authority in Washington require that this issue be forcefully and promptly dealt with."

He reminded that while the association is agreed that the function of Government is to be helpful to its citizens, not detrimental to private enterprise and that some of the objectives of public housing proponents are desirable, it unanimously disapproves NCHA's urging a 100 million dollar authorization for rebuilding Washington slums at this time.

Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, local unit of NAHB, he said, proposes to appear before the Congress to present a plan by which the underprivileged in this city can, at the proper time, be adequately housed through activities of private builders and private lending institutions.

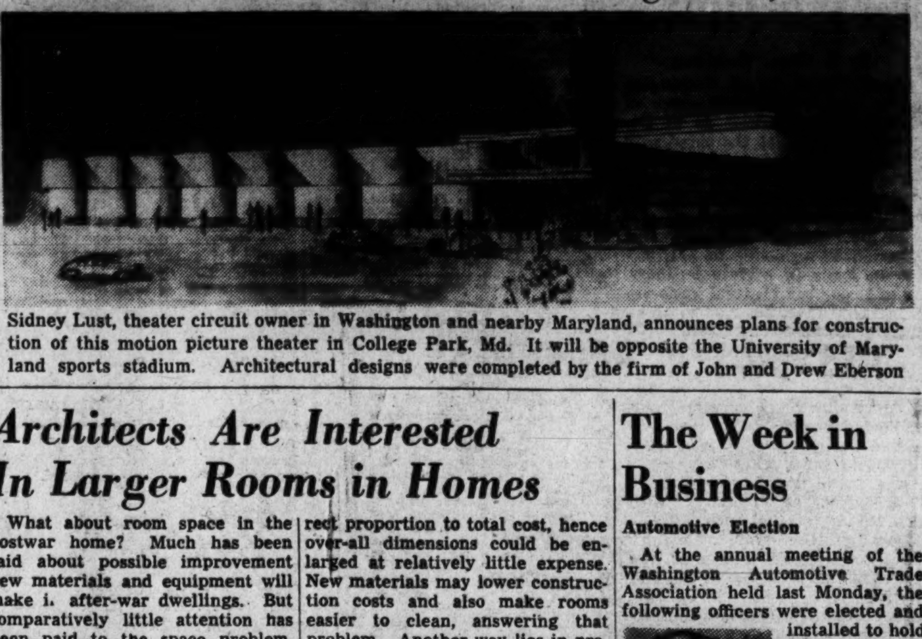
He expressed belief of NAHB that the national debt, rapidly approaching a quarter of a trillion dollars, should not be loaded further with increased public expenditures for housing, reminding estimates show that if all people in income groups of which an infinitesimal part are now being housed were cared for, cost to taxpayers would be approximately 100 billion dollars.

"If the City of Washington is granted 100 million dollars, every city in the country might, by the same formula, demand their proportion to part of Federal funds," he emphasized.

Earlier sessions of the conference were devoted to long-range problems of civilian construction in present and later years. It was agreed that representatives of all branches of the industry must collaborate to produce continuously better homes at steadily lower costs.

Prominent mortgage bankers and representatives of manufacturing groups met with the builders to determine ways and means by which the industry may be best equipped to take on these responsibilities. Such matters as adequacy of FHA Titles I and II, desirability of private finance providing the major part of mortgage requirements, and special mortgage insuring devices to produce 10 million postwar homes were subjects considered.

New Movie Theater Scheduled for College Park, Md.



Sidney Lust, theater circuit owner in Washington and nearby Maryland, announces plans for construction of this motion picture theater in College Park, Md. It will be opposite the University of Maryland sports stadium. Architectural designs were completed by the firm of John and Drew Eberson

Architects Are Interested In Larger Rooms in Homes

What about room space in the postwar home? Much has been said about possible improvement new materials and equipment will make in after-war dwellings. But comparatively little attention has been paid to the space problem, states Tomorrow's Town, publication of National Committee on Housing, Inc., headed by Mrs. Samuel I. Rosenman.

Recalling that in low-priced houses and apartments a tendency has been toward ever smaller room dimensions, the magazine asks whether this idea has been carried too far and, if so, how can more elbow room be given? Many say "yes" to the first question and surveys of opinion among designers and the public cited by the periodical, indicate dissatisfaction with sizes of principal living space in today's small homes.

Architects and research specialists contributing to the symposium agree with [illegible] criticism, believing the new "efficiency" type living quarters with tiny bedroom, tinier kitchen, dearth of closet and storage space, fail to offer adequate room for many normal home activities, this lack being especially felt where families include several children.

The magazine explains the swing toward smaller room sizes was motivated by two main factors: (1) condensation by designers of over-all dimensions in an attempt to reach a mass market by producing housing more cheaply; (2) a considerable demand developed for small homes taking less time to clean. The first meant reduction of rooms or room sizes, or both.

For a time these factors made a successful combination; but now the trend seems approaching the limit and demands from cooped-up families may force it the other way.

To accomplish this, contributors to the discussion explain that cost of increased space is never in direct proportion to total cost, hence over-all dimensions could be enlarged at relatively little expense. New materials may lower construction costs and also make rooms easier to clean, answering that problem. Another way lies in provision of large dual-purpose rooms eliminating one or two small rooms and giving more efficient space for various necessary activities.

Get Early Start On Repair Work

Owners of homes, stores, office buildings and other commercial properties urgently needing major repairs were advised to make prompt arrangements for starting the work as soon as the supply of building products for nonmilitary use becomes more plentiful, in a statement issued by Russell G. Creviston, Crane Co., general chairman of the postwar committee of the Producer's Council, the national organization of manufacturers of building materials and equipment.

As soon as materials become available for civilian use, the demand for repair work will be the greatest in history, following a period of several war years, during which a large amount of needed work has been allowed to accumulate, Creviston said, in part. Some estimates of the volume of repairs run as high as four billion dollars for the first year after the scope of the war production program is reduced, as against a normal peacetime average of about three billion dollars, he said.

Worker's Home Price Averages $4500—FHA

Warworkers buying new homes through the FHA plan in 1943 paid an average price of $4500, made an average down payment of $410, and carried an FHA-insured mortgage for $4100, payable in monthly installments, the Federal Housing Administration reports.

Average monthly payment of an FHA-insured mortgage of $4100, officials said, is less than $25, including interest, payments on principal, and mortgage insurance, but excluding taxes and hazard insurance. Prices of privately financed war houses may not exceed $6000, and a large proportion sells for considerably less than that, depending on regional cost variations.

war home will look like 1941 houses, but will be more comfortable, efficient and economical to maintain," it emphasizes.

"The public has been led," says the magazine, "to believe in fantastic postwar dream homes at impossibly low prices. This is dangerous because it means deferment of postwar home building in expectation of miracles that will not happen for many years, if ever."

It advises that builders are in agreement upon the following practical but decidedly attractive features for the average postwar home:

Steamlined Interiors

Although there will be little change in good, prewar exterior designs, interior design will be further steamlined; more attention will be paid to placing the house pleasingly on the lot, to shrubbery, and to landscaping communities.

Windows will be larger; in some rooms, reaching to the floor to give the benefit of outside view. Heating and air conditioning systems will be improved for greater comfort and economy. Bedrooms and bathrooms will have built-in closets, drawers and storage spaces.

Kitchens will be larger and better designed for comfortable working conditions. Living rooms, likewise, large with special thought given to all livable features possible within the budget. Dining rooms on the other hand will shrink or be included in the living room, with additional dining space in the larger kitchen.

Basements will remain for storage space. Lighting conditions throughout the house will be improved through wider use of glass and better use of fixtures.

ESSENTIAL OCCUPATION
in Washington
A 12-week Evening Course Starting January 18 in OIL BURNERS
will be available to men now employed in other types of business—who have had some form of mechanical training or experience, and who will, within 30 days of the start of the training course, take a job with an Oil Burner Repair Company in Washington, D. C. These jobs have been arranged for the students in advance. The repair and service of oil burners offers an excellent opportunity to those of mechanical background, it is a very worthwhile occupation and a real contribution to the maintenance of critical civilian requirements.
The starting salary is good, and the men who produce should be advanced rapidly. Classes will be held 2 hours per night, 2 nights per week. Men now engaged in an essential activity, working at their highest skill, are not eligible.

Built less than 3 years ago by a construction engineer for his own use, this beautiful brick house was planned for living comfort and low upkeep. It is in excellent condition and offers much to the discriminating purchaser. On the 1st floor are a spacious center hall, living room 14x23 with fireplace, screened living porch 20x20, dining room, efficient modern kitchen and a paneled den with half bath, making it usable as an emergency guest room. On the 2nd floor are 3 restful bedrooms and 2 tiled baths. The 3rd floor is finished and may be used either for recreation or sleeping. A 2-car garage is under the porch, and in the basement are a large recreation room with fireplace, fruit storage closet, servant's room and laundry facilities. Air-conditioned by Chrysler equipment. The house sits on an elevated lot 112x150 ft. in an area of fine homes. Located within walking distance of bus and stores. Price, $20,000; substantial down payment desired. Shown by appointment by

"Of The Services . . ."

Let's Give a Hand to All 'Susans and Bobs' In Their Great Task

By Elizabeth Henney

ELIZABETH HENNEY

Since last week's comments on the Acadia nurses' talk on rehabilitation of the war wounded, there have been a number of inquiries as to whether anything has been done. An investigation developed that some work has already been started in that direction, which is fine. Let's have more of it. So far most of the information on readjusting war casualties has been disseminated through women's clubs, which reach many women of the communities.

However, a great number are not reached through this medium. There is perhaps a young Susan, who married Bob from next door when she was just 18 and he was but a year or so older. He's now away in service and she may be either going back to school, working in an airplane factory or at the ribbon counter of a local store.

Anyway, it's a pretty good bet that young Susan doesn't have much time for going to Clubs. And so, fine as the clubs are and many as they reach, there are still more outlets for this type of information.

But this isn't enough. The sort of information that will help make your "Boy" (whether he return wounded physically or mentally) a readjusted, normal, and contented citizen of the community should be "shouted from the housetops."

It should literally be put forth through every medium available, to reach everyone; radio, magazines, churches, movies, any method.

Because when young Susan's Bob comes home, anytime from day after tomorrow to the end of the war, wounded and sick at heart, Susan is going to want to know (more than she's wanted anything in her whole life) how to help Bob's ragged nerves, how to make those haunting nightmares fade away, how to readjust her outlook on life to his suddenly adult viewpoint, and how to help his confusions to attain a serene and balanced norm.

Susan is going to need to know these things, and so are her Mom and Pop and Bob's Mom and Pop. And it's up to those in this country who know the answers, or who can find them, to give them to all the Susans and Moms and Pops in this country.

Beginning in the next few days Major Barton's article will be reprinted here in serial form, together with material from the Advisory Council to the Women's Interest Section of the War Department; and any other pertinent and accurate material on this subject that can be gathered.

Diplomatic Circling

By Carolyn Bell

OFTENTIMES overshadowed by their headline-conscious parents, the young set of the diplomatic corps provide plenty of good copy for those who care to use it. They may not be signing treaties or pleading their country's cause—but it is important to remember that they probably will be in another 10 years.

Schooled in diplomacy from their pinafore days, these sons and daughters are bound to be wise in the world's ways. They've acquired a nonchalance that is deceiving. They may seem to prefer the gayety of a night club (and why not?) to the intrigue of a conference table, but 10 to 1 they will drive hard bargains in the conferences of the future.

ALTHOUGH HE holds an official position on the legation staff Mohammed Ayoub Aziz, son of the Minister of Afghanistan, still qualifies as a member of the diplomatic young set. A scant 23 years old, he serves as second secretary of the first Afghan legation ever to be established in Washington. The elder Aziz (pronounced as though the z's were hissed) arrived last spring to represent that remote little kingdom. He has to his credit a diplomatic career already well established for he served as minister to Rome and ambassador to Moscow prior to his Washington appointment. He has also served as Minister of Telegraph, Telephone, Radio and Postoffice. Yes, that's all one job.

The Minister's son attended the University at Carbul and has been in his country's service for several years now. Although this is his first trip out of his homeland, he speaks several languages fluently and is at ease in English. He was quite a soccer fan in Afghanistan and played on the university team. Since his arrival in Washington, however, he has taken up ice skating and can be found several times a week at one of the local rinks. Not every fledgling diplomat has a chance to view the Washington panorama during these critical war years—from a front seat. And I'll bet young Mr. Aziz is not missing a trick.

AND THERE is no lack on the distaff side. Proving able diplomats, in their way, are the two daughters of the Indian Agent General and Lady Bajpai, Baghwati and Krishna. Baghwati, whose orinetal beauty brings to mind Princess Zella in "Trelawny," is busy darting from one function to another, as is the attractive Krishna. Baghwati has taken to wearing her raven black hair in western fashion but still sticks to the flattering sari in luscious shades of saffron or blue. One look at these brown-eyed femmes and it is easy to see how they are aiding India's cause.

CERTAINLY Cristina Michels, vibrant daughter of the Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels, should be in the pay of the Chilean Chamber of Commerce. Since Cristina's arrival several years back Chile has been the topic of conversation from Mackinaw Island to the tobacco farms of Virginia. And all becouse of this feminine diplomat without portfolio. These are seasoned diplomats in spite of their youth.

Reservations For Birthday Dinner Made

The President's Birthday Dinner to be given at The Mayflower in the Grand Ballroom on Friday evening, will be limited to 700 guests according to Edgar Morris, chairman of the invitation committee. Reservations for tables have been coming in all week at the committee's headquarters in Room "C," mezzanine floor at the Mayflower, although many invitations were not mailed until yesterday.

Among those who will attend are the Ambassador of Cuba and Senora de Concheso, the Ambassador of Paraguay and Senora de Velazquez the Ambassador of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos, the Ambassador of Honduras and Senora de Caceres, the Ambassador of Haiti, Andre Liautaud, the Ambassador of Panama and Senora de Jiminez, the Ambassador of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Copello with their two daughters, the Minister of Portugal and Mme. Bianchi, the Attorney General and Mrs. Francis Biddle, Admiral William Leahy and Miss Louise Leahy, Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land, Col. Felipe Munilla and Senora de Munilla, Maj. Cemal Aydinalp, Military and Air Attache of the Turkish Embassy and Mme. Aydinalp, Judge Fay Bentley, Col. Agustin Alban-Borja, Military and Air Attache of the Ecuadorean Embassy and Senora de Alban-Borja, Senora Flor Trujillo First Secretary of the Dominican Republic, Commissioner and Mrs. Guy Mason, Commissioner and Mrs. Russell Young, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Rockefeller, Lieut. Col. John Saul, Mrs. Richmond B. Keech, Lacy Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice J. Sullivan, former Gov. and Mrs. Max Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tompkins.

Committee Chairmen Entertain

Committee chairmen, working for the success of the President's birthday celebrations and responsible for the plans for the dinner at the Mayflower have made reservations and will entertain parties of friends.

General and Mrs. Albert Cox have a table as will Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smith, Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Steuart, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice J. Sullivan, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Meem. A number of committees working for other causes will be represented by Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Waters, Col. and Mrs. Frank Higgins, Mrs. Martin Vogel, Miss Helen Cornelius, Miss Helen Daggett, Lieut. Col. Mortimer Clark and Dynever Rhys.

Young Beverly Butcher, daughter of Commander and Mrs. Harry Butcher, here enlists her dog, Rubev, in the War Dog Fund; and, as a proper businesswomen should, carefully reads over the statements contained in the enlistment blank before signing it for Mrs. Spencer Waters, chairman of the Washington War Dog Fund Campaign. Rubev is now Army Capt. Rubev Rochester in the Civilian K-9 Corps. Of illustrious ancestry, Rubev is the offspring of Telek, General Eisenhower's scotty. Telek, by the way, was given to General Eisenhower as a birthday present from his staff on October 14, last year. Some time later, on a mission to Washington, Commander Butcher, General Eisenhower's aide, took back with him a wife for Telek, named Caacie (Canine Auxiliary Air Corps); and in due time a family arrived, Telek II, and Rubev, above

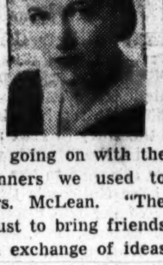
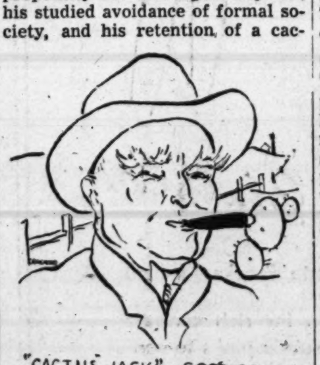
Nice Capitalites Make Poor Copy Sometimes . . . and Vice Versa



THE NICEST and ablest people in Washington are sometimes the worst copy; sometimes—not always. And the most obnoxious people in Washington sometimes are the best news sources; again—not always.

Competent officials who hit on all cylinders, consistently, may chalk up an enviable Capital record, but they probably won't make many headlines. The gracious Washington hostess, who performs her teatime duties in a routine manner—without imagination and a desire to break out of the mold—may win the accolade of effusive society reporters as a matter of course . . . but she will never be a social sensation. Not in this Nation's Capital.

Being "colorful," in short, depends far less on superior character and ability than on a flair for departing from the norm at exactly the right time. Theodore Roosevelt had that sense of timing . . . and so did the late Hugh Jackson, whose refreshing expletives kept him well to the forefront during his entire career. John Nance Garner's bushy eyebrows helped to put him in the limelight, but his propensity for retiring at 9 p. m., his studied avoidance of formal society, and his retention of a cactus-country accent through an extensive Washington career won more news copy for him than any of his many congressional accomplishments.



"CACTUS JACK"—GOOD COPY

No Chief Executive has ever been a better news source than President Roosevelt; no First Lady a more astutely headline-making one than Eleanor. Fact is, their activities have filled so many news columns in the past decade, there has been little space left for run-of-the-mill officials who otherwise might come in for some attention.

SINCE THE DAY Mrs. Roosevelt announced that she would meet the ladies of the press at regular intervals and dispense news "of interest to women," bridge tables from Maine to California have hummed with reports of her activities, interests and philosophy. From the moment the President issued his historic order that banks be closed—that was on the day of his first inauguration, remember?—he has continued to make copy in a manner never attempted by any predecessor. His sense of timing is superb.

Most consistent source of copy in the Cabinet is Secretary Ickes, who has managed to collect more headlines than all his contemporaries put together. He is always on a hot-spot; always either defending himself or attacking somebody; always expressing himself in terms no reporter worth his salt can afford to overlook. Unpredictable, but generally newsworthy, he has not only managed to stay in the news columns himself, but has also pulled in many other officials, including his political enemy, Harry Hopkins.

Secretary Hull's achievements have won him his share of news space, but so has his discernment in biding his time until the proper moment to polish off an enemy; and his frequent use of strong terms to express his likes and dislikes—Tennessee terms that make good quotes.

SECRETARY KNOX and Secretary Jones, both newspaper publishers, know how to make headlines, and they do—often. Postmaster General Frank Walker suffers by comparison with his predecessor, "Genial Jim" Farley, who had a flock of reporters and photographers at his heels the entire time he stayed in Washington. Attorney General Francis Biddle wins his share of news space by putting meat and meritorious phrases into his speeches and news conferences.

The length and luster of her guest list, along with the Hope diamond, have long kept Mrs. Edward Beale McLean leading the field of outstanding Washington hostesses—both in print and out. As a personality, and as a party-giver she is consistently newsworthy. She has an extensive circle of interests and friends, and the courage to choose her guests with complete disregard as to their political prejudices or their possible dislike of each other. Internationalists and isolationists brush shoulders at her dinners. Viscount Halifax diplomatically manages to avoid a face to face encounter with Finnish Minister Procope, although both are frequently there at the same time.

Senators who feud with a vengeance on Capitol Hill meet, mingle and exchange smiles under the hospitable roof at Friendship; and they nod whole-hearted approval as the hostess repeats her case for continuing her big dinners while war bombs are bursting around the globe.

"I'm going to give parties—just as long as I can," she says. "This war may go on for a long, long time . . . and all of us have got to keep in touch—to discuss, argue, agree and disagree, and thrash out our differences now—so we will be ready to get together on the peace . . . and see that it is the right peace this time."

HOPE DIAMOND HEADLINER

FURTHER PROOF that Mrs. McLean has a good sense of timing was borne out in the early days of the war, when she announced that her dinner menus and decorations were to be cut to a strict wartime pattern. Now modest bouquets sprout on tables where the most avish of blossoms once were. Four-course menus are served instead of the eight-course ones in peacetime. American champagne has replaced the stock of imported champagne, and flows less freely.

"I don't want those boys who are fighting for us to think we in Washington are going on with the extravagant dinners we used to give," said Mrs. McLean. "The whole idea is just to bring friends together for an exchange of ideas—ideas that may do something to get the boys back home more quickly."

Former "trust-buster" and now Justice Thurman Arnold has held his share of news space for several years by the simple expedient of interlarding his observations and activities with the crisp bacon of refreshing phraseology—which, of course, is what would be expected of the man who wrote "The Folklore of Capitalism." During the entire time he was in Government service, Leon Henderson's doings and sayings were headlined—not only because of the importance of his jobs, but because he never refused to give a straight answer for a straight question . . . and because he knew how to spin off verbal cure-alls that looked well in print.

Every reporter in Washington probably knows that news-pickings are never scarce when Senator Ellison D. ("Cotton Ed") Smith is in town. The truculent dean of the Senate will snort out a diatribe on almost any phase of the Administration you can mention. . . . And then turn it into a plea for "white supremacy," cut to order for his South Carolina constituents.

"I served under five Presidents," he once declared "before I had to run into an outfit like this, challenging the sovereignty of the State, and violating the Constitution at every step."

He has a sense of timing, a love for the limelight, a rare talent of oratory and mimicry, and an intuitive knowledge of what voters back home want to hear. And he is not averse to tossing in a few choice "cuss words" to heighten the effect. In short, he is good copy.

President Medina Feted at Venezuelan Embassy Reception

By Marie McNair

Washington had a gala day yesterday.

It's a rare occasion in these itmes when a fete of such proportions as that at the Venezuelan Embassy finds its place on a social calendar. But Washington went "all-out" for President Isaias Medina, a man of war, but also a friendly, smiling general, who is spending this week in the Capital and is the center of a whirl of festivities planned in his honor.

Yesterday's reception was a repeat performance, both for the gracious hosts and for their President. For it was but four years ago that Venezuela's Chief Executive then Minister of War and Navy, came a-visiting on a good-will tour, a trip that paid dividends for both the South American Republic and our own United States. Venezuela now is one of our stanchest allies in this hour of need.

It was in February, 1939, that the new and glistening white embassy on Massachusetts ave. had just been completed, and the great reception given by the Ambassador and Senora de Escalante served as both a housewarming and a welcome to Venezuela's next President. With Colonel Medina, now, as then, was his aide, Maj. Alfredo Jurado, now a colonel, who speaks English with a British accent, having been educated in England.

Colorful Setting

Then, as now, the Venezuelan Embassy was a colorful setting for a party. Striking panel portraits of national heroes—Bolivar, Alonzo de Ojeda and General Miranda—look down from the high walls of the blue and gold drawing room. Wartime transportation restrictions today had its influence on the decorations, for the famous Venezuelan orchids, which in former days were flown up to Washington, were missing, yesterday. Instead there were masses of gay spring flowers throughout the salons and the long buffet table in the dining room was centered with a bright bouquet of red carnations, blue iris and yellow snapdragons—colors which were repeated in the Venezuelan flag flying above the embassy doorway yesterday.

No Ration Problem There

The whole embassy staff must have turned over its ration points as a contribution to the fete. There were whole turkeys, chilled, molded salmon, rosy-pink glazed hams, and an endless variety of little sandwiches, canapes, salads, ice creams and cakes. And topping all this, steaming hot and deliciously brewed Venezuelan coffee.

Military accent in the receiving line was lent by the gold-braided uniforms of President Medina and Comdr. Antonio Picardi, chief of the naval division of the Ministry of War and Navy. Also greeting the hundreds of guests were the Ambassador, Senora de Escalante in slim, draped gown of emerald green crepe embroidered on the bodice with crystal beads; Rodolfo Rojas, Minister of the Venezuelan Treasury, and Dr. Manuel Silveria, Minister of Public Works of Venezuela, who accompanied their President to Washington.

Floating from one spacious room to another were the two lovely daughters of the Ambassador and Senora de Escalante—Senora Isabel de Kerpel-Fronius, in a smartly cut simple black jersey gown, and Senora Maria Teresa, literally molded into a straight black gown, the long skirt slit at the front and two shocking pink velvet bows at the low neckline.

Many Notables Attend

Headed by the Peruvian Ambassador, Manuel de Freyre, practically all the chiefs of mission of the diplomatic corps were there. Vice President Wallace came, with Mrs. Wallace, making their way through the suite and finding friends on all sides. The Mexican Ambassador, Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, was there with Senora de Castillo Najera; so also were the Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Ertegun, the Belgian Ambassador, Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, without the Countess who is still in Argentina. Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro, Ambassador of Ecuador, lingered on through the afternoon and others in the throng were the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins, the Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels and their daughter, Senorita Cristina Michels; the British Ambassador, Viscount Halifax, head above all the others; the Greek Ambassador and Mme. Diamantopoulos, the Yugoslav Ambassador and Mme. Fotitch, the Minister of Portugal and Mme. de Bianchi.

Mrs. Hull There

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, was holding her usual court, and then there were Mrs. Edward Stettinius, wife of the Undersecretary of State; Mrs. Adolf Berle, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State; Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Owen Roberts, Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley. Senator and Mrs. Tom Connally, Representative Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom.

Still more included Mr. and Mrs. Fred Britten, Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tuckerman, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, Mrs. Thomas C. Dawson, Miss Lilita Dawson.

Dogs Will Be Enlisted at Local Booths

The War Dog Fund Campaign is getting off to a good start tomorrow morning when 50 socially prominent young women of Washington will take up their posts throughout the city at the War Dog Fund Booths where pups of all classes, breeds and ages can be enlisted in the Civilian K-9 Corps.

Booths Accessible

Through the courtesy and cooperation of some of the local department stores, specialty shops and apartment hotels, these booths will be located in easily accessible points where shoppers, Government workers and business men and women who are dog owners may pick up enlistment forms and literature about the War Dog Fund and how a home dog can become a private or a general in the Civilian K-9 Corps.

Every day stories about the heroism of the Army-trained dogs in active service are received from every theater of war. These dogs are essential to the war effort. They are saving the lives of men, as well as time, and equipment. Your pet poodle who cannot go to war because he is a 4-F can nevertheless be the dog behind the dog at the front if you enlist him in the Civilian K-9 Corps during the campaign, January 24 to February 8.

More Dogs for Army

The funds received through this campaign will enable the Army to receive many more dogs for training. Whatever money is raised through the campaign goes to Dogs for Defense, Inc., the agency officially recognized by the Army as the sole procurement agency in the United States for dogs for war service. All dogs are volunteered by their owners, but before a dog is turned over to the Army for training he must be examined, and if found eligible, shipped to Army training centers.

Dinner Honors Departing Attaches

Military, naval and air attaches of the Latin-American embassies, met at a dinner party at the Statler Hotel last evening, given as a farewell to colleagues who are going back to their own countries after a tour of duty in Washington.

Col. Armando de Souza e Mello Ararigboia, Brazilian Air Attache, was greeted by Gen. Antonio Parodi, Argentinian Military Attache, who presented to him, in behalf of all the Latin-American attaches a silver card tray engraved with the names of the attaches.

Also honored were Lieut. Comdr. Paulo Bardy, Assistant Naval Attache of the Brazilian Embassy, and Maj. Herman Baron, Military and Naval Attache from El Salvador.

Present at the dinner were Major General Carvalho, Brigadier General Alamillo, Brigadier General Parodi, Admiral Labarthe, Captain Brunet, Colonel Revoredo, Colonel Sarmiento, Colonel Alban-Borja, Lima; Colonel Jones-Parra, Colonel Lopez-Larrain, Captain Holger, Chilean Naval Attache; Wing Commander Ruiz, Colonel Munilla, Lieutenant Commander Cadenas, Commander Andrade, Colonel Farias, Colonel Moscoso, Colonel Santiviago, Colonel Castellanos and many others.

Secretary Host At Dinner for Naval Attache

The Second Secretary of the Spanish Embassy and Senora de Barnach-Calbo, last evening gave a dinner party at their home honoring Rear Admiral Enrique Labarthe, Naval Attache of the Peruvian Embassy and Senora Labarthe, who are leaving early in February for Peru.

Among the guests were the Spanish Ambassador and Senora de Cardenas, the Minister Counselor of the Peruvian Embassy and Senora de Chavez, the Minister Counselor of the Spanish Embassy, Marques de Fontana and Rafael Jordana.

Minister and Mrs. Close Are In England

Ralph William Close, former Minister of South Africa, and Mrs. Close, who left Washington a fortnight ago, have cabled the legation in Washington of their safe arrival in England. They will visit their daughter, Mrs. Mann, for some time before making the long journey to their home in South Africa.

Mr. Close in his cable to J. R. Jordaan, Charge d'Affaires of South Africa, said he was now a "duly qualified short snorter," which indicates that he and Mrs. Close made the trip across the Atlantic by plane.

ERNIE BYFIELD'S fire-house restaurant and spa, the Pump Room in Chicago's Ambassador Hotel East, where all the food and some of the guests are constantly in flames, still presents itself as a refuge of de luxe living and visible chic in the midst of wartime shortages, inconveniences and travel hazards. Revisited last week on the occasion of a brief pilgrimage to the Midwest, this department discovered all the Palmers, Swifts and Armours in their accustomed places against a background of flaming entrees, desserts and other gustatory oddments, and Trader Vic, the Oakland, Calif., curio and zombie merchant, galloping from table to table as fast as his teakwood leg would permit, uttering glad cries of recognition and urging those present to come West with him on the Streamliner and sample the wonders of his booze bazaar at the Golden Gate.

A considerable proportion of Byfield's Pump Room clientele is composed of visiting hotel men and restaurateurs who came to view its parade of knee-breeched flunkies and Regency elegances and sample is pheasant en plumage, crepes maison and ice cream, Gertrude Lawrence, with an eye to importing or imitating these wonders on their own home-town premises.

A parallel of the entire set-up, with its overtones of outrageous and costly smartness, would be impossible in any city in the land except possibly New York, Los Angeles or Miami,

War Orders Force Change In Nuptials

By Betty Ruth McDevitt

With everything set for a pretty home wedding next month, nuptial plans for Miss Martha Lucille McDonald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arch McDonald of Burnt Mills Hills, Md., and Ensign Winston Hunter, USNR, have gone awry—at least for the time being.

Seems the bride-to-be set February 12 for the ceremony in the attractice McDonald home, one of the community's showplaces, selected her attendants and was about to issue invitations when word came from Ensign Barnard that his leave has been canceled. Still in the dark about what to do Mrs. McDonald says it may end up with the wedding in Pensacola, Fla., where the bridegroom-elect is stationed.

But amid all the excitment there is a round of parties going on for Martha. Tonight a miscellaneous shower will be given for the bride-to-be by Miss Connie Schuttee, Miss Catherine and Miss Marguerite Williams at the latters' home in Chevy Chase. Another party was a crystal shower Friday night, when Miss Marilyn Barnett was hostess at her home, on East-West highway, all hostesses being classmates of Miss McDonald at Chevy Chase Junior College. Jane Doyle of Chevy Chase gave a personal shower earlier in the week.

Being much feted with bridal showers is Miss Marilyn Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin R. Brown of Takoma Park, whose wedding to Aviation Cadet William Hoffman, USNR, will take place the latter part of the month in Pensacola, Fla.

Mrs. Robert Bird honored Miss Brown at a large shower Friday night at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wilson of Takoma Park. Other parties during the week included showers by Miss Brown's colleagues at Selective Service and the Alpha Delta Pi Sorority, of which she is a member.

House guests at the Wilson home are their new daughter-in-law, Mrs. Henry Wilson, whose marriage to Lieutenant Wilson took place December 4 in Fresno, Calif., also the bride's mother and young brother, Mrs. E. L. Yeager and Allen of Clear Lake, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Banks Murray, with their daughter, Felicia, are moving February 1 to Los Angeles, Calif. They have sold their home in Silver Spring to Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Whitehurst of Washington. Two farewell parties were given for Mrs. Murray, one a luncheon by Mrs. Richard Campbell Tuesday at Mrs. Kay's Toll House and the other an evening party Thursday, when Mrs. Aline Reed Heady entertained. The Murray's son, Lieut. Banks Murray, jr., has recently been transferred from the South to Los Angeles.

Second Lieut. Donald L. McCathran, U. S. Air Corps, son of Mr. and Mrs. Irving L. McCathran of Washington Grove, is visiting his wife, the former Jean Esther Brook, and their infant son. Lieutenant McCathran recently has been appointed an instructor in navigation at Hondo, Tex.

Couple in Leesburg Give 'Open House'

Leesburg, Va., Jan. 22.—Mr. and Mrs. R. Lee Rollins held "open house" on Monday evening at their home in Leesburg in celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary. Over 100 guests were present to honor them on this occasion. Yellow flowers were placed throughout the house, with candles completing the mantel decorations in the dining room. The large wedding cake was decorated with white and yellow motifs with clusters of yellow rosebuds on the table to carry out the color scheme. Mrs. Clarence Kephart presided at the piano and played many selections during the evening.

Mrs. Rollins, who was dressed becomingly in black with a corsage of lavender orchids, was assisted in receiving by her daughters. She is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Myers. Mr. Rollins, now a retired farmer and landowner, is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Rollins. The couple have seven children, who were present for the occasion. Also present were 10 of their 13 grandchildren. Their children are Mrs. Mary Gibson, Mrs. Nellie Gaines, Mrs. Carrie Herndon, Mrs. Annie Kirkpatrick of Leesburg, Mrs. Martha Harshman of Wilmington, Del.; J. Robert Rollins, Leesburg, and Fred Rollins, Ryan. Also present for the occasion were Roy Harshman and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Russum of Wilmington, Del., and Mr. and Mrs. Herman See and daughter of Winchester, Va.

Mrs. J. Manly Cobb entertained at tea at the rectory on Saturday afternoon in honor of her mother, Mrs. R. J. Davidson of Blacksburg, Va., who is a guest of her son-in-law and daughter, the Rev. and Mrs. Cobb. Mrs. Arthur S. Jenkins was hostess to Circle No. 1 of the Woman's Society of Christian Service on Friday afternoon at her home in Leesburg. Mrs. James T. Jackson entertained Circle No. 3 of the Women's Society on Friday night. Circle No. 2 met Tuesday night with Mrs. Sam Johnston.

Mary Adams Manning, Lieut. Cleveland Wed

In a ceremony of wide interest here yesterday, Miss Mary Adams Manning became the bride of Lieut. Robert Gran Cleveland, USNR, son of Henry D. Cleveland of New York. The former Miss Manning is the daughter of Mrs. Harry Kendall Hickey and the late Francis Bartlett Manning.

With the Rev. T. Guthrie Speers, pastor of the Brown Memorial Church in Baltimore, officiating, the wedding took place at the Edgevale terrace home of the bride's great-aunt, Miss Mary Barclay Adams. Given in marriage by her stepfather, the bride was gowned in white satin, styled with a fitted bodice and a softly draped skirt falling into a train. Heirloom rosepoint lace trimming and a matching veil accented the costume, and a bouquet of bride's roses and white orchids completed the ensemble.

Mrs. Barin Attends

Mrs. Jocelyn H. Barin of Philadelphia was matron of honor, wearing a pink lace-and-net frock. Matching ostrich tips in her hair and a bouquet of roses were also features of her attire. Bridesmaids were Miss Catherine Hamilton of Washington and Miss Caroline Abel of New York City, cousin of the bridegroom. Their pale blue gowns were like that of the matron of honor and their accessories also were similar to hers.

Lieut. Nelson W. Aldrich, USNR, of Boston, was best man, and ushers were Lieut. Robert A. Irwin and Lieut. Lawrence A. Sykes, both USNR.

Off to Florida

Following the wedding there was a reception, and later the couple left on a wedding trip to Florida. They will be at home here after February 5 at 1868 Columbia rd.

The former Miss Manning is a graduate of Holton-Arms and Radcliffe College. She made her debut here at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Beale B. Howard, in 1938. She is a granddaughter of the late Capt. and Mrs. Charles H. Manning of Manchester, and a great-granddaughter of the late George W. Adams, one of the founders of the Evening Star.

Lieutenant Cleveland was graduated from the Asheville School for Boys and Rollins College. He is now on duty with the Bureau of Ships. He is a grandson of the late Dr. Clement Cleveland of New York City.

Maryland Society Session

The Maryland State Society, Daughters of the American Colonists, will meet at the home of Mrs. W. Edwin Moffett, 2216 North Calvert st., Baltimore, on Tuesday. The board meeting is at 1 p. m.; chapter meeting at 2 p. m. The speaker will be Mrs. William H. Lunt, sr.

Naval Drama Group Presents Plays

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 22.—An audience of members of the Naval Academy Women's Club, WAVES and nurses of the Annapolis station, who were the guests of honor, and other guests of the club, enjoyed the presentation on Friday by the drama group of the Naval Academy Club of two clever one-act plays by Essex Dane. Mrs. William M. Mebane, chairman and director, proved her ability both as coach and actress. The casts were well chosen and directed. The first play, "The Woman in the Freight Car," was a tense drama, and the second, "The Chef," a delightful comedy. Both were enthusiastically received. Lieut. Frances Bonner of the Navy Nurse Corps and Lieut. Jean McClean of the WAVES poured coffee after the meeting. They were assisted by members of the club.

Mrs. Rubin A. Labovitz has been named general chairman of women's activities for Annapolis' annual President's Birthday Ball, scheduled for Saturday, January 29, at Carvel Hall. Recently Mrs. Labovitz, with the members of her committee, attended a reception at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, for Mary Pickford, Nation-wide chairman of women's activities for the birthday balls all over the country. Lieut. W. R. Sima was named chairman of the committee on special entertainment during the intermission of the Ananpolis ball. Comdr. R. V. Hull has been appointed by Rear Admiral John R. Beardall, superintendent of the Naval Academy, to take charge of Naval Academy participation in plans for the Annapolis ball.

On Friday night of last week the Annapolis Cotillion held its annual "hard times" party at Carvel Hall. Costumes of every variety were evident and gum chewing, noisy games and jitterbug dances were permitted. Prize winners for costumes were Ansel Willets, a boy who appeared for a brief time clad in a barrel, and Lola Steele, who wore a long plaid skirt, short jacket, veiled hat and galoshes and carried an umbrella, suitcase and some bus tokens and pennies. The dance was chaperoned by Mrs. William Farmer and Mrs. Theodore Houpt. Mrs. William H. Duvall directs the cotillion.

When the prettiest girls at Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Va., compete for the title of Beauty Queen of the college, Miss Susan Tillson, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. E. M. Tillson of 83 Bowyer road, Naval Academy, a sophomore at the school, will represent the students of Virginia Hall, a college resident unit. Miss Tillson was chosen by the students living in the hall as their entry in the competition.

Mr. and Mrs. John Philip Kleis of Severna Park, near Annapolis, this week announced the engagement of their daughter, Grace, to Midshipman Robert Burleigh Manley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Burleigh Frank Manley of Sunset Beach, Calif.

Miss Kleis graduated from the Annapolis High School in 1943, and Midshipman Manley will graduate in June from the Naval Academy. The wedding will take place shortly afterward.

Weddings of Interest

Graham—Alfonte

The daughter of Brig. Gen. James Raymond Alfonte and Mrs. Alfonte of 3812 Kanawha st. nw., Miss Mary Gates Alfonte, was married yesterday afternoon at St. Alban's Church to Lieut. Harold Lee Graham, jr., USN. Lieutenant Graham is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Graham of Berkeley, Calif. The Rev. Charles T. Warner officiated.

General Alfonte gave his daughter in marriage. She wore a gown of white satin made with bodice of white lace, and long lace sleeves. Her veil of bridal illusion was held in place with a Juliet cap of pearls and orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a diamond pin that belonged to her great-great-grandmother. She carried a bouquet of gardenias.

Mrs. Lloyd Young, wearing a gown of blue brocaded satin with matching cap and veil, was matron of honor. She carried spring flowers. Other attendants, dressed in gowns fashioned like that of the matron of honor were Mrs. Dexter R. Mapel, Mrs. Harry Horsman, Miss Mary Ann Ferrandou. Mary-Travis Brown was flower girl and Alexander Hamilton Evans, wearing a blue sailor suit, was ring bearer.

Lieut. Charles Nelson was best man and Lieut. William Gaylord, Lieut. Earl Freer, Lieut. Robert White, Lieut. G. G. Ball, and Midshipman William Doubt were ushers. A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony. After a wedding trip to New York, the couple will leave for the West Coast, where they will make their home.

The bride attended Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, Ala. The bridegroom attended the University of California and was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1941.

Gaddis—Motsinger

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Marr Gaddis will make their home in Marlboro, Md., upon their return from a wedding trip to Miami, Fla. They were married at the parsonage of the Trinity Moravian Church in Winston-Salem, N. C., on Wednesday with the Rev. Douglas L. Rights officiating.

The bride, the former Miss Wanetz Catherine Motsinger, daughter of Mrs. Dora B. Motsinger and the late A. S. Motsinger of Wallburg and Winston-Salem, wore a dress of blue wool with matching hat and black accessories. She wore an orchid corsage. Mr. and Mrs. S. P. McGee of Newport News, Va., brother-in-law and sister of the bride, were attendants.

The bride is a graduate of Greensboro College. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Edith Marr Gaddis and the late James P. Gaddis of Marlsboro, Md., and Washington. He was graduated from Duke University, where he was a member of 9019, Iota Gamma Pi, Phi Beta Kappa, and Sigma Pi Sigma. He is with the Department of Agriculture as a research chemist at the Beltsville, Md., Center.

Vars-Kincaid

The Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral yesterday afternoon was the scene of the wedding of Miss Nancy Kincaid, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Leland Kincaid of Arlington, Virginia and Syracuse, New York, and Lieut. (j.g.) Addison F. Vars, jr., USNR., son of Mrs. Lindsley Vars and Addison F. Vars of Buffalo, New York. The Rev. Edward Randolph Welles of Christ Church, Alexandria, officiated at the 4:30 ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in ivory satin, with a veil of venetian point lace and tulle. She carried a spray of orchids and freesia.

Miss Idella Grosvenor of Syracuse, N. Y., was the maid of honor and only attendant, and Addison F. Vars, father of the bridegroom, was the best man.

Ushers were Lieut. (j. g.) Montgomery Pooley, USNR; Richard A. Stocton and Alfred Hendee, all of Buffalo, N. Y.; James F. Kincaid of Arlington, Va.; Lieut. Forrest Griffith of Baltimore and Lieut. (j. g.) William E. Vogelsang of San Marino, Calif.

Following the ceremony there was a small reception at the Carlton Hotel. The couple will make their home in Washington.

The bride attended Abbot Academy in Andover, Mass., and Syracuse University. The bridegroom attended Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and Yale University.

Davis—Kimball

Last evening in the Church of the Covenant, with white snapdragons and palms for decor, Miss Sarah Josephine Kimball became the bride of Ensign John Spencer Davis, USNR.

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Victor Kimball of Washington. Ensign Davis is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Kerr Davis of Vancouver, Canada. Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney officiated at the ceremony.

Given in marriage by Lieut. Francis Dieuaide, the bride wore a gown of white chiffon, with long train and bodice of beaded, chantilly lace. She carried a bouquet of white roses and gardenias.

Attending the bride were Miss Nancy Brown, who was dressed in blue satin and net, and Miss Anne Gallagher, attired in pink satin. Mrs. Francis S. Dieuaide, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. She was dressed in yellow chiffon and carried roses and violets.

Best man for the bridegroom was Norman Asher of Washington, and selected as ushers were Edward Pendleton and James Baker.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Connecticut ave.

Mrs. Davis is a graduate of Bennington College, Bennington, Vt., and her husband attended Princeton University before entering the services. The couple will make their future home in Norfolk where Ensign Davis is stationed with the Navy.

Bassham—Terrett

Off to New York, Cincinnati, and Harlan, Ky., on their honeymoon, are Yeoman First Class H. Frank Bassham and his bride, the former Miss A. Jayne Terrett.

Mrs. Bassham is the daughter of Thomas V. Terrett of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Pearl Bassham of Harlan, Ky. Officiating at the recent home ceremony was the Rev. Robert L. Keasler.

The bride wore a gown of white satin embroidered with seed pearls. A full sweeping skirt fell from the fitted bodice. She carried white orchids mounted in roses.

Maid of honor for the ceremony was Miss Betty Terrett who wore a dress of blue taffeta with veil and matching feathered cap.

Serving as best man was Yeoman First Class James Burrell. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Terrett home.

Mrs. Bassham attended the Holy Cross Academy and the Marjorie Webster School. The bridegroom attended the University of Kentucky and the New Mexico Military Institute. The couple will make their home in Arlington, Va.

Cinema Program Is Planned For Tomorrow Evening

Mrs. Sidney S. Alderman, Mrs. George Y. Worthington, jr., and Mrs. Russell Nicklin are three of an energetic committee working for the success of the third of a series of "soirees du cinema," sponsored by France Forever, to be given in the Sapphire room of the Mayflower Hotel tomorrow evening at 8:30. The program reflects the varied contribution of France to the modern world of art, entertainment, humor and political reconstruction.

The feature film will be the renowned French comedy, "Hearts of Paris," in which Raimu and Michele Morgan take leading roles. There will also be shown bits of films from 1906 to 1910, made by the film pioneers, Zecca and Cohl.

Sanatorium Group To Plan Luncheon At Meeting Here

"Final plans for the "Save a Life Luncheon," to be given by the Los Angeles Sanatorium City of Hope auxiliary at the Mayflower Hotel Monday, January 31, will be discussed at a regular dessert meeting preceded by a board meeting at the Washington Hebrew Congregation's vestry room, Tuesday at 1:30 p. m.

Mrs. Benjamin Brill will preside. Reports will be given by the luncheon committee.

Adas Israel Board To Be Entertained

Mrs. Henry Gichner, president of the Sisterhood of the Adas Israel Congregation, has sent out invitations to board members to attend a luncheon at her home, 6115 33d st. nw, tomorrow at 12:30 p. m. A business meeting, the first under her administration, will follow.

Mrs. Gichner, newly elected president, is not new to Adas Israel. She has for many years worked with the Board of Education in both teaching and advisory capacity.

Club's Dinner Set Tuesday

One of its largest dinner meetings will open the 1944 season of the Business and Professional Women's Club at Barker Hall on Tuesday, January 25, 6:30 p. m. Guests of honor, who will speak on the part women can play in legislative affairs, are Representative Frances Bolton (Ohio), Senator Hattie Caraway (Arkansas), Representative Mary Norton (New Jersey), and Representative Winifred Stanley (New York).

President of the club, Miss Marjorie Webster, will open the meeting and introduce Mrs. Ellen Woodward, chairman of program. Mrs. Marguerite Taylor, chairman of the legislative committee, will turn the program over to Miss Laura Berrien, master of ceremonies. Vice chairman of the legislative committe, also seated at the guests' table, will be Mrs. Augusta Brown.

One of the most important activities of the club on behalf of men in the service on leave, is duty every Saturday night at Service Club No. 1, 309 9th st. nw. Mrs. Brownie Kerr, chairman, has charge of this service unit. Volunteers for this canteen duty should phone Mrs. Kerr, Adams 6276. For volunteer duty every Tuesday evening for making bandages for the Red Cross, members should phone Chairman Vera Lundquist, Woodley 6900. Business meetings of the club are held the second Monday of each month at 7:30 p. m., at the Washington Club.

Her Ideals Lead Mrs. Emmerich To Train Child Care Workers

By Genevieve Reynolds

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

When it comes to establishing equilibrium in the postwar world, 30 solid, dependable, clear-thinking citizens in a community are worth more than their weight in gold. It is this firm belief, plus a desire to do all possible to help win the war, that pulls Mrs. Herbert Emmerich out of a warm bed at the crack of dawn to see that the children of mothers working in the war effort have proper care and supervision.

"A secure and harmonious childhood makes for better citizens," explained the hard-working chairman of the child-care committee of the American Women's Voluntary Services. "Neglecting or taking care of children now has serious postwar implications."

Almost immediately upon arriving in Washington in 1941, chic, alert Mrs. Emmerich plunged into volunteer war work. She has over 2000 hours to her credit. Each week she is sure to put in at least 50 hours, sometimes 60 or 70, depending upon the job to be done.

Plans, Administers

When the need for day nurseries and child care centers in the District became apparent, the AWVS decided to equip, staff and operate a child-care and volunteer training center of its own. McLean Gardens was the site chosen. It's run for the children of warworking mothers in that area. Mrs. Emmerich helped plan the school, architecture, play equipment, etc. Then she headed (still does) the administrative end of it. In addition, she teaches the children art several hours a week. "I never expected that my personal interest in painting would merge with my interest in children," she said.

Except for teaching art to children in the nursery schools, handsome, brown-eyed, brown-haired Mrs. Emmerich has given up painting for the duration. Especially interested in painting children, she had made such painting her vocation. She studied at Phillips Art Gallery here in 1933.

Soon after graduating from Wellesley College, she helped to organize a summer camp for children under 20 in New York. This was a nonprofit camp that specialized in educational as well as physical fitness programs. Instead of two weeks, the children spent the entire summer in the camp. Again this was volunteer work for Mrs. Emmerich. Later she studied at Columbia University, working toward an M. A. degree in early childhood education. Well trained, brilliant and alert, she is well qualified for her volunteer war job. Besides serving as chairman of the child-care committee of the AWVS, she represents that organization or the child-care and protection committee of Civilian War Services.

Interviews Volunteers

When child-care aides apply for volunteer work in the D. C. day nurseries Mrs. Emmerich interviews them and passes on their qualifications and fitness for the work. Incidentally, there are about 75 child-care aids who assist in the child-care centers throughout the city. However, 200 to 300 are needed to help take care of the children of working mothers. As more and more men are being inducted into the service increasing numbers of mothers will be forced to seek employment. Hence, they must find nursery schools to look after their offspring while they are away from home.

Because she feels so strongly that the children of today must be prepared to assume citizenship responsibilities in the postwar world, Mrs. Emmerich has given up all personal recreation for the duration. Normally she likes to entertain often in her home. But what with working day and night, she has little time even to see, much less entertain her friends. Also, she must look after her own family—husband and three children. Her daughter is in college, one son is in the Army and another, 14 years old, is at home. Then, too, there are the marketing and household chores to do.

Danish Envoy Will Address College Club

Henrik de Kauffmann, Danish Minister to the United States, will address a luncheon meeting of the Washington Smith College Club Wednesday at the YWCA at 12:45. He will speak on postwar problems.

De Kauffmann has been Danish Minister since 1939, having been appointed a few days before the war broke out. On April 9, 1940, the day Denmark was invaded by the Germans, he declared that he would act independently of occupied Denmark and that he could not accept any orders which he suspected the Germans had forced the government in Copenhagen to issue.

It was in accordance with this statement that a year later he signed the agreement by which the United States acquired air and naval bases in Greenland for the duration of the war.

When this agreement was made public, the government in Copenhagen was forced by the Germans to dismiss him, but neither he nor the American government recognized the dismissal as valid and he continued as the fullfledged Danish Minister to the United States.

Since then his duties have included, in addition to those of normal diplomacy, such administrative functions as are normally carried out by a government.

He has charge of all public Danish funds in the United States, and has been able to continue the interest payments on the public Danish dollar bonds.

When open revolt broke out in Denmark in August, 1943, the last remnant of a Danish government in Copenhagen ceased to exist, but this has made no change in De Kauffmann's status and functions.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

There is little question but that we mothers are given to paying extravagant attention to all of a child's misconduct and to passing over, as something to be expected, the right and desirable behavior.

This tendency puts emphasis and glory where is does not belong. Children love to be noticed. They are excited and often stimulated by scolding because it is directed at them.

On the contrary, they discover that when they behave, nothing happens. Nothing at all. So they learn to act up, to refuse to eat, to make a fuss about going to bed, or to stand up and proclaim loudly that they "won't go to sleep"—in order to make something happen. It isn't that they particularly enjoy being bad, it is rather that being bad turns the sun of the family attention upon them.

Emphasize Good Behavior

We should recognize that it is emphasis upon good behavior which makes it gratifying to the child. This does not mean that one must go about being foolishly complimentary every time the child accepts a bite of food, or goes to the toilet without pressure, or takes a nap.

Thus, "You enjoyed your dinner and that pleases mother. She enjoys her dinner, too." Or, "It's nice to lie down in a warm, soft, little bed and go to sleep without fussing." The compliments or the praise can be directed toward the behavior, not especially toward the child responsible for it.

We aren't praising him for doing something he doesn't want to do—for why make him believe he doesn't want to eat, or sleep or be clean?

We are, rather, praising the kind of behavior which leads to happiness, satisfies his hunger, makes him rested, clean, not just behavior we want accomplished.

Praise Inspires Child

If we keep behavior in mind we won't inspire the child to feel he is a pretty wonderful person and much to be admired because he is acting in all these desirable ways. The important point is that acting this way gives him added pleasure and we are happy to see him enjoying it.

As a by-product he'll very likely increase his good behavior because it does not win notice from us. We can stand that.

Send a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope for our leaflet, "When the Child Says 'No,'" to Myrtle Meyer Eldred, in care of The Washington Post.

Proper Diet Ends Sweets Temptation

By Ida Jean Kain

What do you miss most on your reducing diet—mince pie, chocolate candy? No doubt it's something sweet, good and gooey! And the trouble doesn't end with the calories. Sweets have a pernicious effect on your appetite: The more you eat, the more you want to eat. You can see where all this leads!

You won't believe it when you are sitting by while a fat lady next to you tucks away pie and ice cream, but you can anesthetize the craving for sweets. The method is simply to eat more of the protective foods.

By getting your full share of all the essential nutrients, you can crowd out this superficial hankering. This is the only way you can do it.

As long as you are sticking to your diet, you have a sort of barrier between you and sweet temptations. But once the pounds are off, you feel free to go right back to your old way of eating, which certainly includes dessert. Then you wonder why it is you can't stay slim!

If you are to continue losing until your weight is normal and to keep it there, you must center your menus around the protective foods. Eat enough of these to satisfy you, and you won't be so tempted by the sugar-coated calories.

When you have a good breakfast, you don't especially want a doughnut and coffee in the middle of the morning, or pie with your lunch. So keep right on making this a good meal, with fruit and either an egg and a thin slice of toast or a whole grain cereal and milk and coffee.

It is never a good idea to put too much strain on your will power, so always try to have your lunch on time. Don't go beyond your usual lunch hour or you won't be satisfied with the normal amount of food and, sure, you'll have a sweet.

Then, if along about 4 o'clock in the afternoon you feel the hunger pangs ganging up on you, have a cup of hot tea with one lump of sugar and lemon, or a pep highball of orange juice with an egg beaten into it, or fruit of some kind, or a glass of milk. Any of those will tide you over without giving you too many calories.

Always have a good dinner, but trim away the fats. Eat a generous serving of the lean meat or fish, vegetables, salad, and one roll plus your butter ration.

Instead of a rich dessert, have one of those hard peppermint candies. Don't eat it—just hold it in your mouth and let it melt and saturate the taste buds.

Wartime Milk Bottle Cap is a Headache

By Martha Ellyn

"When all else fails—jab and pray." Such is the way most persons feel about the technique of removing a wartime milk bottle cap. The milk bottle cap situation is another one of the home problems rising from World War II. It has occasioned controversy and discussion about as knee-deep as daisies in June.

Martha Ellyn

But there is more to this situation than the milk which meets the eye—after the jab. Evidently the War Production Board gave Order M-104, in March, 1943, prohibiting the use of wire staples for milk bottle caps without experimentation with the nonstaple type. The board's cap-lifting technique may be better than the average person's.

Civilians are about as agitated over the elimination of the metal aid on the milk bottle cap as they were about the fleeting Bread Order prohibiting sale of sliced bread. Fingers were cut, tempers accented and bread whacked in those days. Now, clothing is splattered, fingers jabbed with ice picks, and milk wasted because the milk bottle cap no longer gives with the greatest of ease.

Makes Survey on Subject

To learn if others were experiencing as much difficulty with milk-bottle cap-lifting as myself, I waylaid coworkers, homemakers, bachelors, pedestrians and anyone who looked at all milk fed.

A bachelor reported that he tried elevating the milk-bottle cap by way of the ice pick. The result was tragic—infected finger. So the moral to his story, "Watch the ice pick."

A fastidious Government girl revealed that her cleaning bills had mounted since the advent of the metal-free bottle cap. She has learned to don an apron now before the serious operation is undertaken.

A Southern girl who always finds adventure in new things, reported this way: "I can't say this new way of lifting a milk-bottle cap holds any fancy for me. I get the top layer of the cap off, then have to dig out the second one."

A housewife lamented the extra soap flakes she used mopping up splashed milk off the linoleum and round-about. And she says no longer can she say, "Sister, go and pour yourself a cup of milk." A child cannot manipulate the uplift of the 1944 version milk-bottle cap.

One shining example of precision lifting was uncovered in the survey.

"My first experience of cream geysering all over my kitchen was the first and final one. Now, I take the removal slow and easy."

Would that there were more perfectionists and patient souls like this young woman! Then there would be more understanding of the necessity of the War Labor Board's orders L 103-B and M-104 eliminating this minute convenience.

Steel is the basis of the staples. The steel situation is becoming less acute. But even with steel available the curtailment cannot be lifted. The staples are required to be tin-coated when used for milk containers. We are living off of stock piles of tin.

So until the time when such hazards are cleared away, it will behoove milk and cream bottle cap lifters, to exert patience and a good sprinkling of patriotism and do the best they can. And don't blame your milk company for it is no saving to them to have dissatisfied customers.

Protect Your Milk

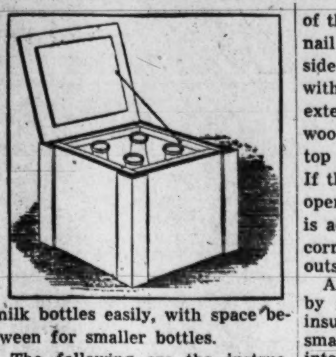
How to take care of milk is also a concern of the homemaker. Many persons find it necessary to be away from home at the hour of milk delivery. Protection of milk against exposure from the time it is delivered until it is stored in the refrigerator is important.

Milk is one of our most important foods and must not be wasted. Exposure to the weather for several hours may mean freezing in cold weather or souring in hot weather.

It is not difficult to protect milk and creamery door deliveries. An insulated milk bottle container can be built by any home craftsmen. All that is necessary to build the container are a few lenghts of lumber for a frame and a little insulating board to cover it. A box 11 inches square will hold four quart milk bottles easily, with space between for smaller bottles.



The following are the instructions for making this box: Frame, using ¾x¾-inch lumber. A box 11 inches square will require about 12 feet of lumber. Nail the frame securely together with 5-penny or 6-penny nails.

Insulating board ½ inch, ¾ inch or 1 inch thick may be used. The ½-inch board will give satisfactory results in most cases. Additional protection may be had by using two layers of ½-inch insulating board, the second as an interior lining.

Cover Construction

For the bottom, cut a piece of insulating board about ⅛ inch smaller than the exterior dimensions of the frame. From each corner cut a piece ¾-inch square. Then insert the insulating board inside the frame with the edges resting on top of the lower part of the frame and nail it tightly. Next, cover the outside of the frame on the four sides with insulating board. Finish the exterior corners with a piece of wood corner bead running from the top edge to the bottom of the box. If the container is to be set in the open, exposed to the elements, it is advisable to extend the exterior corner mold to form legs, and the outside given two coats of oil paint.

A convenient cover can be made by gluing together two pieces of insulating board, cut so that the smaller (bottom) piece fits snugly into the box, while the larger piece completely covers the framing. For a handle, nail a small block of wood to the top piece before gluing. Nail through the insulating board into the wood, not through the wood into the board.

Glamour Buying Continues to Mount

Merchants have been telling fabulous stories about the glamour buying that's going on these days. It seems that the grimmer times become and the harder people work, the more lavish becomes their taste.

Those who wear war-plant coveralls by day will pay $35 for a night gown. And the giddiest shoes, the maddest hats sell like hotcakes. Ermine-trimmed hats at $70 go out of the stores as fast as they come in and purses at from $50 to $150 really sell. Huge and glittering costume jewelry brings luxury prices, while diamonds and furs sell like peanuts, but not for peanuts.

Love of Horses and Dogs Ranks Among Most Constructive Interests a Child Could Have, Says Woman Who Is Haunted by Story of 'Beth'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I haven't a copy of the paper at hand, but I am fairly sure it was January 11 when you published the letter of a young woman who was concerned about her 13-year-old sister's preoccupation with horses and her dog. I felt at the time that you gave a very good reply; but the 13-year-old "Beth" is so much like myself at that age that she has haunted me.

I was the youngest in a rather large family, and considerably younger than the sister next to me. From the time I could notice such things in the atmosphere, I had the feeling of being a fifth wheel, and more or less tolerated. Where we lived at that time, I had no companions of my own age, and only during school term was I with my contemporaries. Like Beth, I more or less "hung around" a stable, where riding horses were kept. Also, I had a much-loved and loving dog.

I developed a great interest in flowers, trees, small woods animals and read a great deal. This was a satisfaction to me; but I was teased and ridiculed on all these scores, until literally my life was hardly worth living. I remember very well an insinuation made by a relative of mine that my attachment to the dog was abnormal. I did not know what she meant until some years later, when I read a book on morbid psychology; and by then I knew, also, that my relative was morbidly interested in abnormal behavior herself, and a chronic "insinuator."

Wholesome Girls Prefer Horses to Beaux, at 13

LIKE BETH, I, too, had some talent for drawing, though this was not encouraged; and, in fact, was considered a little odd. So I kept it to myself and refused to show anything I did. It has never been developed, but I still get pleasure from it myself. All these things did not prevent my growing up into a normal person, getting interested in boys, marrying and having a child of my own. I am still terribly fond of horses and dogs; and glad to see that my child is,—although with her it is not a compensation for lack of family love and understanding. I am still pretty touchy about revealing my enthusiasms, unless I know I have a sympathetic listener. And I cannot endure to have my child teased or baited.

When my child started riding, I had a chance to observe the girls who do hang around a stable; and I thought to myself, "How wholesome and natural they are." They arrive in old jeans and sweaters, work like beavers and forget all about how their hair looks and whether the lipstick is sufficiently thick. I think it is much better for a 13-year-old than hanging around the corner drug store or other meeting places with an avid but elaborately unconcerned eye on the boys. They are good looking girls, too; nothing "queer" about them. They simply have the exaggerated enthusiasm of their age for anything which interests them.

Suggestion for Evoking Beth's Artistic Talent

THE OLDER sister who wrote you about Beth must have a warmer interest in her, than simply a watchful concern for the family reputation. I hope she will range herself on Beth's side, try to understand her, and not only show, but feel, special affection for the child. Since she would like to see Beth develop her recently neglected talent for drawing, she could make her a present of "How to Draw Horses," by John Skeaping; and "Drawing Dogs," by Diana Thorne,—both published by The Studio, New York City. Undoubtedly there are other books of this type; but I happened to run onto these at the Whyte Galleries here, and have had a great deal of pleasure from them. I feel that Beth will come out all right in any case; but her adolescence could be much happier if someone backs her up. Sincerely,

ANOTHER BETH.

Antidote for Moods: Ride; And Ride Well!

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your handling of the problem of "horsey" Beth was wonderful. I am well past 13; but horses, their care and feeding, have been a joyful interest of mine for years. The devotion I feel to dogs and horses is probably the best part of me. I am old enough to know that now. As an antidote for what ails most people, I prescribe riding, and riding well. Recently, my husband has been saying to me, "I wish you'd get yourself a horse again. You are so much nicer when you're riding." That is true, I believe; because having no babies, the time I spend taking care of horses always takes my mind off myself, with the happiest results.

It is the girl who hangs around the stables, hoping for an extra ride, eagerly lending a hand to make herself useful, who honestly loves horses. And if Beth's sister has no affinity for horses or the people who love them, that's her tough luck. She is wise to stay away from the stables; because the horses would know instinctively that she was "against" them, and she might suffer bodily harm. I could give you a fascinating family history, telling how love of horses and dogs has affected our destiny; but it would take too long. Sufficient to say: Miss H., I am completely won by your good judgment. Sincerely,

MARGARET T.

'Conversation Tips' Offered by Club

Practical problems of personality development, social and business etiquette and for making satisfactory personal adjustments in a strange city are being studied every Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. by the Newcomers Club of the E Street YWCA. This week the personalized clinic will stress "Conversational Tips." Participating in the panel discussion are Mrs. M. S. Peabody and Mrs. George Baker, members of the committee on counseling, and Mrs. George Boell, secretary of the YWCA counseling department.

In addition to the clinic session on Tuesday evenings, members enjoy an informal hour of music and games. Also a beginning co-ed dancing class meets at 7:30; at 9 the servicemen come in to dance.

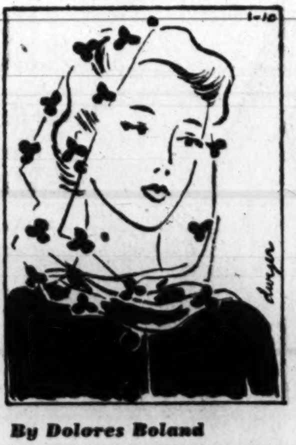
It's About Time



By Dolores Boland

It's about time to cut small flat posies out of a discarded felt hat or hats. Tack these to a triangle of veiling and wear for evening. Have veiling the color of your hair. Use three French knots at center of each posy, to hold to veil.

State Groups Plan First Joint Party

The Illinois State Society and the Indiana State Society will be hosts at a joint dance and party at the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel on Wednesday evening, it was announced yesterday by Congressman Evan Howell, Illinois, and Congressman Robert A. Grant, Indiana, presidents of the respective societies.

Gov. Dwight H. Green of Illinois, and Gov. Henry Schricker of Indiana, have been invited to come to Washington for the affair. Other notables who have been invited include Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, James M. Barnes, assistant to the President; A. M. Carter, director of the Smaller War Plants Corp.; Senator and Mrs. Scott W. Lucas, Senator C. Wayland Brooks, Capt. Edward A. Hayes, USN, and Mrs. Hayes, and Gen. U. S. Grant 3d.

Wickard to Attend

Among the guests representing Indiana will be Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard, Senator Ray Willis and Mrs. Willis, Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, head of the Selective Service System; Wayne Coy of the Bureau of the Budget, Paul V. McNutt, director of the War Manpower Commission; Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information.

The patronage committee will include Mr. and Mrs. Edward Springer, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. (Dutch) Bergman, Hon. and Mrs. Louis Ludlow, Dr. and Mrs. R. R. Sayers, Capt. and Mrs. L. C. Stevens, USN, Mrs. Esther Costa, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Whitlock, Congressman and Mrs. Robert A. Grant, Congressman and Mrs. Evan Howell, Congressman and Mrs. C. W. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Bastedo, Congressman and Mrs. Everett M. Dirksen, Mr. and Mrs. DeLaMater, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Maholm, Mr. and Mrs. James E. Stewart and Everett Watkins

There will be dancing between 9:30 p. m. and 1 a. m. Refreshments will be served. Dress will be optional.

Servicemen Invited

Enlisted military personnel from Illinois and Indiana on assignment in Washington and vicinity will be admitted free.

Arrangements for the affair, marking the first time the two State societies have combined in a social affair of this nature, have been made by Congressmen Howell and Grant; Mr. Bergman, who is past president of the Indiana Society; Congressman Bishop, past president of the Illinois Society, and Mrs. Walter R. Bastedo, first vice president of the Illinois group.

LEONARD LYONS SAYS:

Soldiers Know How to Handle a Radio Smoothie; So Sinclair Lewis Didn't See the Mormon Temple; Colonel Roosevelt Fights on Milk and Crackers

Sinclair Lewis and Lewis Browne, author of "See What I Mean," were in Salt Lake City recently, on a lecture-tour. They met the Mormon officials, and Browne asked David McKay, one of the leaders of the Mormon Church, for permission to inspect the Sacred Temple . . . "Yes, you may see it," McKay agreed . . . Browne turned to Lewis and said: "Did you hear that, Red? We're going to see the Sacred Temple. We'll be the first outsiders ever to have seen it" . . . Lewis turned to McKay, and said: "Say, that's fine. What do we have to do?" . . . "The first thing you men will have to do," replied McKay, "is be baptized and become good Mormons."

The Japanese handwriting in the ads for Alan Hynd's new book, "Betrayal From the East," spell out: "Buy U. S. War Bonds. Kick Hirohito in the Pants." They were written by a Hawaiian-born Japanese the author met at International House . . . Frank Fay will appear in the new play being produced by Monte Proser, proprietor of the Copacabana . . . Martha Gellhorn, wife of Ernest Hemingway, now is in London. She hopes to reach Yugoslavia and report the campaigns of the Partisans . . . Lieut. Col. James Roosevelt, who participated in the conquest of Makin, in the Gilbert Islands, is the only American fighting on a diet of milk and crackers.

Gilbert Miller, who is producing Clare Boothe Luce's new play, tried to reach her by phone. He placed a Washington call for "Congresswoman Clare Boothe Luce" . . . "Congressman of what?" asked the operator . . . "No, Congresswoman Clare Boothe Luce," said Miller . . . "In care of what?" asked the operator . . . "Clare, not care-of," said Miller. "I'll spell the whole thing for you." He spelled out "Congresswoman Clare Boothe Luce" . . . "Just a minute, please," said the operator. "Is that an organization?" . . . "And what an organization," said Miller as he hung up.

Two of Ferenc Molnar's new plays have been accepted for production—one by the Theater Guild and another by Eddie Dowling's production manager, Elizabeth Miele. The Hungarian playwright has written these plays in English . . . Gilbert Miller was the producer who used to bring Molnar's plays to the American theater. It was an involved process. First, they'd meet in Italy. Miller then would have the play translated into German. Molnar translated the Hungarian version into French. All these scripts were typed in double-space. Between the lines, Miller wrote, in English, the version he deemed best.

THEATER DEPT.: Pvt. Irwin Shaw, the playwright, returned from Africa recently. He was sent overseas during the rehearsals of his last play, "Sons and Soldiers," which Max Reinhardt and Norman Bel Geddes produced. This was Shaw's sixth play. His first was the pacifist play, "Bury the Dead." . . . The playwright revealed that on the night "Sons and Soldiers" opened on Broadway, he was in Accra, Africa, lying on a ropecot in a tent with a whimpering monkey belonging to another soldier. "And of all the six opening nights I've had," he confessed, "this was the only one where I was able to get a good night's sleep."

RADIO: Arch Oboler, the radio producer-director-author, was sent by the Hollywood Victory Committee to address the Army Special Services conference in Atlanta. The conference was attended by 400 soldiers who are being taught to produce shows abroad . . . "You put on radio shows with Bette Davis, experienced actors, studio orchestras and expert sound-effects men," one soldier spoke up. "Let's see you do it without 'em" . . . "All right. I'll show you," Oboler agreed. He asked for volunteers from the audience, lectured them for five minutes on radio acting, and then gave them one of his radio plays, 'Dr. Croton" . . . The GI volunteers, unrehearsed, played it amazingly well. When the show was over, Oboler was told the truth—that every volunteer had been a professional radio actor.

The published version of "Winged Victory" has a final scene which isn't used in the New York performances. Moss Hart substituted another closing scene shortly before the Broadway premiere . . . When the British newsprint shortage became acute, the papers began to eliminate all the features which could be spared. The London Express' cross-word puzzle was one of the casualties, but was quickly restored when the Prime Minister wrote a letter to the Editor asking that the puzzles be continued . . . Road conditions have become so impossible that the "Star and Garter" show girls, at $85 a week, and the dancers, at $65, refuse to tour.

Oklahoma Barristers To Be Society's Guests

The Oklahoma State Society's meeting today will be particularly for Oklahoma lawyers and their wives who are now Washington residents. Hosts will be Judge and Mrs. R. L. Disney. The party, from 4 to 7 p. m. at the Oklahoma House, 2301 Calvert st., is also for service personnel and all Oklahomans.

C. B. Tart, who last Sunday entertained the group of Oklahoma newspaper people with his "hillbilly" music, will return with his guitar and more folk songs.

Several hundred Oklahomans now have visited the new clubhouse for the regular Sunday affairs. Mr. Elgin Groseclose is chairman of the series.

Relief Society Tea on Tuesday

The Washington Ladies' Auxiliary of the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society of Denver is sponsoring a member-bring-a-member tea at the home of Mrs. Hymen Goldman, 5100 14th st. nw, at 2 p. m. on Tuesday.

This is one of a series of teas where members introduce their new members to the activities of the organization. The society is helping the war effort by taking care of tuberculosis patients. Their sanitarium in Denver has every facility for restoring the sick to health and by joining the Ladies' Auxiliary, the women of Washington are contributing to this cause.

The Shop Scout

"It's going to be a suit Spring!" is one of those phrases that fashion experts have been bandying about pretty regularly for years. We're going to hear it more frequently, more emphatically this spring than ever. Even the dress designers are busy making their creations look as much like suits as possible. I really think we're going to wear suits morning, noon and night, in town, in the country, everywhere. Softer suits, with lots of Bellhop Jackets and nipped waistlines. Buy one now to wear under your winter coat, and then emerge from beneath with your suits as gay and interesting as the first Spring crocus.

HELLO! this is Susan Joy

"SPICE UP YOUR WINTER WARDROBE" . . . says Susan Joy, of BRESLAU'S. The Friendly Shop welcomes Spring, with sprightly prints, whitely frosted blacks and tailored clothes. The most elegant outfits I've seen are the checker suits with matching topcoats—nipped-in waistlines, and short peplum-jacketed dressmaker suits. All fashions hot off the designer's griddle. Luscious Spring coats in soft pastels to make your dressiest hours complete. Yes, it's Spring in all its splendor, forecasting sparkling creations for juniors and misses. 617 12th St. N.W.

Gellhorn Novel Helps You Escape, Stowe's Book Will Wake You

By STERLING NORTH

LIANA. By Martha Gellhorn. Scribners. 285 pp., $2.50.

Slim, blond, youthful Martha Gellhorn has not been wasting her time while fishing the Caribbean with her husband, Ernest Hemingway.

Out of water as blue as a Winslow Homer painting of the Gulf Stream she has fished a first-rate romance and enough local color to satisfy any island 'aficianado.'

MARTHA GELLHORN

Liana, dusky wife of Marc Royer, the wealthiest man on the island of St. Boniface, will delight two kinds of readers: (a) Those who want to get away from it all, and (b) those who appreciate excellent writing and good character delineation. The tragic denouement should not dismay any but those readers with the most tender sensibilities.

Climax Disturbs, Convinces

Briefly this is a triangular situation. Liana, simple child of nature, is not happy with Marc. But when Pierre, honorable and complicated young French school teacher, is hired to open her mind to the wider universe, the two well-matched young people fall desperately in love.

None of the situations which develops from this hopeless involvement s of the standard or 10-cent-store variety. And the relationship of Marc to Pierre is particularly unusual and interesting, and above that to be found in the slick-paper magazines. The climax is disturbing and very convincing.

Martha Gellhorn was not a born novelist. She achieved her present skill through hard work and self-criticism.

Like Ernest Hemingway, she is a mid-Westerner (born in St. Louis in 1908), and has roamed Europe. She met him in Spain when both were reporting the Civil War from the Loyalist side. As everyone knows, he dedicated "For Whom the Bell Tolls" to Martha, then married her in November, 1941. It was Hemingway's third, her second—and they have lived happily ever since.

Martha Gellhorn published her first novel, "What Mad Pursuit," in 1934 while she was still the Marquise de Juvenel. She made a survey of people on relief in the industrial areas and some of this material found its way into "The Trouble I've Seen." Since then she has published other stories and books, generally good journalism more than fiction.

But, with "Liana," Martha Gellhorn has come artistically of age. She has written a very amusing and occasionally penetrating novel.

THEY SHALL NOT SLEEP, By Leland Stowe. Alfred A. Knopf. 399 pp., $3.

If your arteries are brittle, skip this one. By the time you have finished Leland Stowe's smashing indictment of Allied idiocy you will be seething with anger—anger at the crass stupidity of the English in Burma and India; anger at the Chinese politicians and profiteers making millions while the Chinese masses bleed and starve; anger at our own reactionary knaves who, through pro-Fascist sympathy are systematically scuttling the peace for which our soldiers are dying.

Leland Stowe is not only a brilliant reporter; he is a courageously honest observer.

Stowe Scooped World

Two of his world scoops brought down wrath upon his head. The first was his charge that Oslo fell under most peculiar circumstances through the aid of a small stable of Trojan horses. After all, Stowe was on the scene. Most of his critics were not.

Stowe's second world scoop was his revelation that the Burma Road was a rotten mass of profiteering, Chinese "squeeze," mismanagement, bribery, hijacking, smuggling and the common or garden variety of murder. Tens of millions of dollars' worth of lend-lease goods were rotting on the docks in Rangoon, and 30 ships were waiting to be unloaded—(clay pigeons for the Jap bombers) because untold quantities of contraband and private merchandise were displacing war material in the caravans of trucks. Stowe does not blame the Generalissimo for this; after all, Chiang Kai-Shek cannot personally oversee every phase of his vast and courageous war against the Japs.

But neither did Stowe see why the story should not have a world airing, thus bringing action which might save China's great-hearted and suffering army.

Burma Road Story Told

Of Stowe's seven articles on the Burma Road, I believe only parts of three were finally allowed to be published. But they produced an astonishing and immediate effect, as you will discover when you read this book. He spent 17 months in Burma and India.

Stowe also spent some 17 months covering the war in Russia where (despite his distrust of communism) he found the sort of spirit and efficiency and devotion to cause so completely lacking on the Road to Mandalay. Both assignments are covered thoroughly in this book—a completely new job of interpretative writing, not a rehash of his dispatches.

Finally the book gives Stowe's well-reasoned arguments concerning the manner in which we are currently losing the peace:

We are dealing with pro-Fascists in a manner which is discrediting us all over the world. Our appeasement of Franco, our Darlanism, our pampering of ex-Fascist officials in Italy is a quick-sand foundation for the peace to come. Our State Department is still riddled with reactionaries whom no liberal either here or abroad can respect.

Stowe's book is a stern warning written by a democrat who spells it with a small "d." If we do not want to face either a unified, anti-white Asia and (or) an alienated Russia in a gigantic third World War we had better mend our ways—pronto. We had better let the suffering underground of every tortured nation clean house of its own Quizlings. And we had better mean what we say about the Four Freedoms, both in Europe and in Asia. Read this extended report on the world situation and discover why.

To the folks back home?
When you have received a gift?
When somebody has had a baby?
When a friend or relative is ill?
When friends get married?
When someone has died?
When you want a better job?

Sculptor's Plan

Gen. Jackson Statue Well Balanced

By Helene Champlain

The stories say that Gen. Andrew Jackson was somewhat erratic, as Presidents go, but his statue in Lafayette Park is remarkably well balanced.

Bernard Baruch and other habitues of the square might never guess it, but the general and his rearing horse could keep that poised-in-air position if there were not a bolt or rivet to hold them down. To assure this, the sculptor, Clark Mills, used solid bronze for the horse's tail and hindquarters while the forepart of the statue, including Andy, is hollow.

Jackson devotees will be pleased to know that the park may have been named for Lafayette, but their man has priorities. Once Lafayette's admirers attempted to place his statue between Jackson, who stands in the center of the square, and the White House. The pedestal was built, but Lafayette was eventually relegated to his present corner.

Lafayette Square's Jackson was the second equestrian figure erected in this country (the first, George III, having been torn down during the revolution). Sculptor Mills bought a Virginia thoroughbred and taught it to rear for artistic realism before he set up his workshop at 15th st. and Pennsylvania ave.

Costing some $40,500, the statue was dedicated January 8, 1853, on the thirty-eighth anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans.

These were some of the things which members of the Thornton Society, recently organized to stimulate interest in Washington's historic buildings and monuments, learned from Stanley W. McClure, acting chief of National Memorials and Historic Sites of National Capital Park Service.

Bemelmans Overawed Art Director; The Hotel Splendide Lost That Waiter

By Clip Boutell

Some years ago when Ludwig Bemelmans was still working as a waiter at the Ritz—oops, sorry, the Hotel Spendide—he was trying to sell a series of drawings to Collyer Young, now an ensign in the United States Navy, but at that time an art director for Young & Rubicam, the advertising agency.

Mr. Bemelmans thought and thought about how to close the deal. Finally, he solved the problem. He appropriated a private dining room, rearranged it to appear like part of a suite, and entertained Mr. Young royally on champagne and caviar supplied by his friends in the kitchen.

Got the Contract

"Mr. Young must have thought you were a big-shot," I said. "But how long did the deception last?"

"Oh, just until the contract was signed," said Bemelmans, laughing.

Bemelmans, the author, is still a little dazed at the selection of his novel, "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep," by the Book-of-the-Month Club. (It will be published on February 18 by Viking.) "People will either adore it or hate it," he says. "The hero is an 80-year-old South American general with epileptic fits, and the heroine is an English woman of 65 who carries her coffin with her wherever she goes. It isn't exactly written to formula."

Bemelmans, the painter, has the simple honesty and directness of a child. His studio apartment on Gramercy Park is filled with his canvases, and his enthusiasm for his own work is infectious. I admired a New Yorker magazine cover on which he was working and then I spoke of a large painting of New York harbor which seemed the very essence of his work.

Gags About Work

"It's a wonderful painting isn't it," he said. "It was done by nine underprivileged children in a New York public school."

The next book by Roi Ottley, author of "New World A-Coming," will be based on a round-the-world trip. . . . Carl Brisson, the stage, screen and radio star, is completing an English translation of his autobiography "Without Make-Up." It will be issued in May. . . . The Seaman's Church Institute of New York announces a marine poetry contest for merchant seamen. Entries should not exceed 30 lines in length and should relate to ships and the sea.

More Book Chit-Chat

Alden Hatch has written a book about a certain Indiana boyhood. The title is "Young Willkie," and it will be published this spring by Harcourt. . . . Anya Seton, author of "Dragonwyck," (February 1), is the daughter of Ernest Thompson Seton. Her novel is already being compared to "Rebecca"—a dubious honor already preempted by "Victoria Grandolet" for 1944.

Ingersoll and Brennan, the literary agency, has a book which some courageous publisher should sign up without delay. It is by Lloyd Mallan, assistant to Hubert Herring on the Committee on Cultural Relations with Latin America, and it deals with the Japanese and German agents in South America. Sterling North has suggested a title: "Our Bad Neighbors." . . . John McCaffery of Doubleday Doran's editorial staff is going over to American magazine at the end of this month. . . . E. G. (Jack) Morris who was so largely responsible for the publication of "Under Cover" is the coauthor with Doris Skomorovsky of "The Siege of Leningrad," published this week.

"The Man With the Lumpy Nose" is the title of the latest winner of Dodd Mead's Red Badge Mystery Contest. Written by Lawrence Lariar, cartoon editor of Liberty, it will be published in March. . . . The April selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club will be "Blessed Are the Meek," by Zofia Kossak, published by Roy, the Polish firm.

Selden Menefee's Book Indicates Soundness of U. S.

ASSIGNMENT: U. S. A. By Selden Menefee (Reynal & Hitchcock: $3).

Everything is beautiful on the home front: reactionary Congressmen fight the soldier vote; racial minorities riot in Harlem and Boston and Detroit; the Middle West continues to listen to the Chicago Tribune; deep in the heart of Texas a new variation of Nativism rears its Stetson hat. Beautiful.

But Selden Menefee, after a 15,000-mile tour of these United States, comes up with a hopeful book, a fighting book, a democratic book which shows faith in the common man.

In Bridgeport, Conn., he found a clean, honest, efficient and liberal local government already making its postwar plans. There is no lack of fighting spirit in the deep South, the far West and most of the Atlantic seaboard. Strikes are making no fatal dent in war production.

In general, Americans are behind the President's foreign policies, according to everything Menefee could gather.

Despite the subversive efforts of the copperhead press, every Gallup poll shows more of the Nation willing to cooperate internationally after the war in maintaining the peace. And generally speaking, the people are ahead of rather than behind their Government—a healthy political manifestation of our form of government.

Compared to the state of the Nation's morale in 1863-64, we are remarkably united.

TWENTY-SEVEN STORIES by Pearl S. Buck (Sun Dial).

It seems as if Pearl Buck's name on a book these days is sufficient to sell almost anything. In the days before we paid the attention to China that we do now, she was writing about the "people I know best, which happen to be the Chinese."

These tales, which rank with some of Mrs. Buck's best work in "The Good Earth" and subsequent well known books, have been taken from "The First Wife" and "Today and Forever." But they are assembled in such a way that they tell of the older China, its gradual change, the clash between the old and the new, between the firm traditions of the East and the urgent ideas of the West. There are sketches of the tragic effects of the Yangtze flood and a memorable portrait of that figure of true melodrama, the bandit war lord and the dawn in him of patriotism when the Japanese invade the land.

"The Science of Fighting Fires

BY JOHN J. McCARTHY (NORTON)

For 29 years John J. McCarthy, commander of the New York Fire Department, has been fighting fire and training men to fight them with him. His "The Science of Fighting Fires" is virtually a handbook for "the citizen, the professional, the volunteer and the auxiliary."

The strategy of fire fighting, that intricate and interesting, if little publicized, use of special tactics and devices to combat particular types of emergencies is covered. Particular stress is placed on the proper organization of fire-prevention measures and the operation and advantages of the mutual-aid plan are discussed. The birth of the Auxiliary Corps and the use of specialized technical personnel and equipment are set forth.

The book makes clear the part that the citizen must play if American rural and community life are to be adequately protected, not only against direct or subversive incendiary attack but also normal fire hazards.

In an appendix of especial interest to the professional and volunteer, the technical subject of hydraulics is clearly explained in easy-to-understand language.

La Fresnaye's Exhibit At Phillips' Is Called Indictment of War

By JANE WATSON
The Post Art Editor

Considering its implications, the Roger de La Fresnaye exhibit at the Phillips Gallery is profoundly moving. In its way it is an indictment of war as telling as the fiercest satire or starkest realism.

Viewed purely as an art show, the display gives a somewhat fragmentary picture of the painter's achievement. But one can hardly quarrel with a choice obviously made on the basis of availability of material, particularly in the case of an artist whose total output was so limited and so uneven. It is a loan collection, assembled by the Arts Club of Chicago, representing La Fresnaye in his off moments as well as at his best. His larger canvases are rare, and only a few are shown here. The rest are smaller still-lifes and abstractions, and there is a room devoted to his later sketches.

Died at Age of 40

Shortly after, he himself was an infantryman, fighting the Boche in the First World War. He survived—that is all one can say. The remaining brief period of his life was spent in a losing battle against a disease contracted in the trenches. He died when he was barely 40. In the interim he had become a white-haired man wasted with disease, haunted by the shadow of death. He continued to paint and draw, but toward the end he was almost too weak to handle a pencil.

La Fresnaye's brilliant paintings many of them glorifying the French military tradition, were all executed before 1914. A French writer, from the vantage point of 1935, saw in these works the symbol of French courage. To him they represented, "in a world degraded by materialism . . . the virile qualities that had made for the greatness of France."

One of the paintings thus referred to is shown here—"L'Artillerie," and in addition there are several beautiful abstractions and still-lifes, including the Phillips Gallery's "Mappemonde."

Many Postwar Works

The sketches are mostly, later postwar works and include several portraits. Toward the end of his life La Fresnaye did a number of shadowy, introspective self-portraits. One of these is in the French museums' collection of drawings now at the National Gallery of Art.

We have no idea where the great prewar martial painting, "Le Cuirassier," is now, but that, too, belongs to France, for it was purchased by the Louvre shortly before the Germans marched into Paris in World War II.

And, for the sake of the record, another large and stunning canvas by the artist is now in the collection of the Museum of Modern Art in New York. Painted in 1913, it is called "The Conquest of the Air."

As far as we are concerned, the already much publicized Cuttoli tapestries, which are now shown in Washington at the Phillips Gallery for the first time, are a flat disappointment. This project, launched shortly before the war by a French senator's wife, was an attempt to link the work of leading contemporary artists with the ancient art of tapestry-making.

Triumph of Effort

Granted that the workmanship is awe-inspiring, and allowing for the fact the cream of this collection may have been taken off in sales by this time, the group represents more a triumph of enterprise than a happy fusion of artistic effort.

It is good news that the Phillips Gallery is gradually getting back some of its choicest pieces, which have been away on loan. One room is devoted to a group of contemporary European paintings, among which visitors will see some old favorites.

The print rooms in the gallery are now filled with a series of recent water colors by Milton Avery, whose oils were shown here last year. This painter's whimsy is getting a bit calculated.

Wood Sculptures Displayed

Sculptures by Joseph Goethe, a District resident, carried out in various rare and exotic woods, are being shown in the Hall of Forestry of the Museum of Natural History in New York through January 30. The exhibit shows how Mr. Goethe utilizes to fullest advantage the peculiar characteristics of color, grain and texture in each wood. Included in this unusual display is the sculptor's "Black Panther," one of two pieces recently completed for the "S. S. African Meteor."

The Old Dominion Train Flies

(But That's Only When It's Going Down the Hill)

By Jean Craighead

The train of the century-old Washington & Old Dominion Railroad has to be shoved out of the Rosslyn station. Once over the steep grade of the Potomac hills, the gasoline train gets rolling on a wild ride to Leesburg, Va.

It goes downhill with a delirious roar, sparks flying, engines wide open.

In about two and a quarter hours the two-coach train pulls up beside a yellow clapboard station in Leesburg. Ten minutes later it starts back, downhill most of the way, and comes screaming into the Rosslyn terminal—35 miles away—in an hour and a half.

The Old Dominion is probably the only train in the war effort that still permits passengers to ride in the cab. Out of necessity on crowded evenings when commuters between Washington and Leesburg are poured into the flier, passengers have to sit with the engineer and coal stove. The coal stove is part of a central heating unit, and is not for locomotion. The engineer stokes it like a furnace in a mountain hotel, and sends the heat in dry blasts through the cars. With the doors wide open and the snow falling there has yet to be a complaint about the cold.

A pretentious looking vehicle with sauve modern lines, the train, recently bought from the Pennsylvania Railroad, constantly breaks down in the middle of a trip. Everybody looks around for the trouble while the engineer hops out and ties the thing together, or puts the wheels back on the rails. The train gets under way again, and the passengers go back to their papers or their naps.

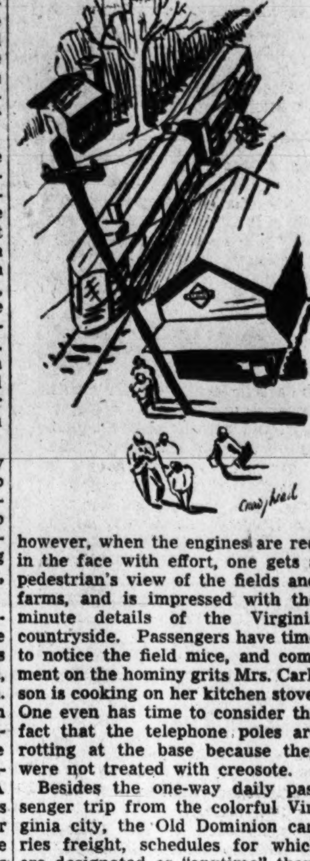
For glaringly obvious reasons the railroad does not guarantee the arrival or departure of the locomotive. A mimeographed schedule also states that the company is not responsible for the weather. If a prospective passengers meets with an accident due to "darkness, heat, cold, wind, rain or snow," while waiting for transportation, the railroad will tolerate no complaints. Everyone is informed that it is a wild gamble between the farm and the bottom step of the train. After that, it seems, one is in the green pastures of the mechanical age.

The Old Dominion is probably the only live railroad that has stop signs for itself at motor traffic intersections. The engineer pulls up at crossroads and peacefully observes the right of way. Oncoming trucks from the left, however, cause no dispute.

Patterned after the more elaborate railroads of the Nation, the Old Dominion has whistle signals posted all along the 35-mile run, and religiously observes them. Intra-cabin whistles also conform with national rail commerce. Although the conductor is about three steps from the engineer, they seriously follow railroad traditions. A passenger wants to get off at his farm or distillery—the conductor gives three hot-air beeps on the buzzer, and the engineer returns the signal with an "okay" on the fog horn. This stacatto of messages punctuates the trip at about the distance the crow flies with a corn cob in his beak.

The scenery and the local passengers are probably the main features of the trip, and the reason for the box seat price of 83 cents, tax included, to Leesburg, Va.

Down hill, one does not get an accurate impression of the landscape. Houses merge with blurred woodlots, and the earth appears to be uncertain of its axis. Uphill, however, when the engines are red in the face with effort, one gets a pedestrian's view of the fields and farms, and is impressed with the minute details of the Virginia countryside. Passengers have time to notice the field mice, and comment on the hominy grits Mrs. Carlson is cooking on her kitchen stove. One even has time to consider the fact that the telephone poles are rotting at the base because they were not treated with creosote.



Besides the one-way daily passenger trip from the colorful Virginia city, the Old Dominion carries freight, schedules for which are designated as "anytime" there is enough coal, farm produce or building materials to make the run worthwhile.

MIDWINTER TRAVEL TALKS

By Cameron Macrae

More than 50 trotters and pacers are now stabled at the Pinehurst, N. C., race track to prepare for the harness races next summer. Equestrian activities at the mid-South resort are threefold, with interest divided between riding and driving horses, trotting horses and polo ponies. Last Sunday Camp Mackall competed against Fort Bragg, with top-ranking goal players now in uniform composing the teams.

St. Petersburg and Tampa, on Florida's west coast are twin cities, separated only by Candy Bridge, a 5-mile span across Tampa Bay. While Tampa is mainly industrial, St. Petersburg is almost wholly recreational and residential. On the basis of income-tax returns, St. Pete has more millionaires per capita than any other city in the South.

With the final changing of the guards at midnight Saturday when the Army Air Forces formally handed the keys of the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel to Josiah White, that Atlantic City, N. J., hotel was returned to its owners. More than 3000 soldiers have been housed at times in the hotel during its year and a half "in the service," and as many as 10,000 meals a day were served the men. The hotel will reopen to the public on March 10, completely rehabilitated.

Southern Pines, N. C., a full calendar of outdoor sports has been arranged for the remainder of the season with golf and quail shooting heading the program. The center of activity will be the Southern Pines Country Club which maintains two picturesque golf courses, a hunter trial course and horse-show grounds on its 300-acre estate. Following today's 18-hole medal tournament sponsored by the Sandpipers, there will be a similar tournament for women on Wednesday. The season on quail and turkey remains open until February 10, with 10 quail and 1 turkey per day the limit.

Ormond Beach in Florida, for years the winter home of the late John D. Rockefeller, occupies a narrow peninsula and faces the Halifax River on the west and the Atlantic Ocean on the east. It has, of course, the noted 18-hole golf course which has been the scene of numerous championships and over which the greatest men and women golfers of the past two decades have played. There are tennis courts, putting greens, and archery ranges.

On a cliff which towers up from the terrace-shaped site of Quebec, the most outstanding location on the St. Lawrence was chosen for the Chateau Frontenac, which was half a century old last month. Few hotel suites have had as many royal guests as the famed Canadian hostelry—King George V, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, the Duke of Windsor when he was Prince of Wales, the Duke of Kent, the Duke of Gloucester, the King and Queen of Siam, Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, and Princess Patricia. The high spot of the hotel's career, however, was when our own President and the British Prime Minister met there last August.

The Sea Island Gun Club at Georgia's famous resort is only a quarter mile from the Cloister. There are two complete skeet layouts with only the marshland and open sky for background. Precision shooting is tops among servicemen who spend their leaves there and those who only "spectate" have a circular lounge in the clubhouse from which to watch the luck of each participant.

MUSICAL NOTES

Beginning Friday night, the Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress will present three weekly concerts devoted to the violin-piano sonatas of Beethoven. The artists are Joseph Szigeti and Claudio Arrau, and the 10 sonatas will be played in the following order: January 28—C minor, Op. 30; A major, Op. 12; G major, Op. 96. February 4—A minor, Op. 23; E flat major, Op. 12; A major, Op. 30; G major, Op. 30. 11—F major, Op. 24; D major, Op. 12; A major, Op. 47. Tickets, at a service charge of 25 cents each including tax, will be available after 8:30 a. m. tomorrow at C. C. Cappel's box office in Ballard's, 1340 G st. They may be obtained either for the series or for single concerts, but no more than two tickets for each concert can be distributed to one person.

The National Gallery of Art presents a chamber music concert by personnel of the U. S. Navy School at 8 p. m. today in the east garden court. The participating musicians are Jesse Tryon and Florestano Tozzo, violins; Jerome Maggid, viola; John Morris, violoncello; Angelo Borghi, clarinet; Robert Buvinger, flute; Robert Noonan, piano; Harold Wendt and Leonard Molberg, trumpets; Lloyd Schmidt, horn; Julius Whitinger, trombone; James Linn, tuba. The program is as follows: Quintet for clarinet and Strings (Mozart), "Night Piece" (Foote) and "Four Minutes and Twenty Seconds" (Harris) for Flute and String Quartet; Prelude in G minor (Bach-Siloti), "Naila Waltzes" (Delibes-Dohanyi), Quintet in B flat minor for Brass Instruments (Victor Ewald).

David Soyer, USN, violoncello, and Russel Palmer, USN, piano, will present the Sunday Music Hour at 4:30 p. m. today in the YWCA. The program includes the first local performance of Jean Hure's sonata in F sharp minor, a Boccherini concerto, Schumann's Adagio and Allegro; Faure's "Apres un reve" and the first performance of a prelude by Emanuel Vardi.

Margaret Hanne Sheridan presented her pupil, Barbara Carson, soprano, in a recital last Wednesday evening in the Salle de Recital.

Hugh Porter, organist of Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas in New York, will be presented by the local chapter American Guild of Organists in a free recital on Tuesday at 8:15 p. m. in Calvary Methodist Church. The following program is announced: Psalm XIX (Marcello), Alla Siciliana (Handel), Allegro from Symphony LV (Handel), Prelude and Fugue in D major, Chorale-Prelude on "Erbarm Dich," Fugue in G major (Bach), Toccata on "Leoni" (Bingham), Carillon (DeLamarter), Allegro from Symphony VI (Widor), Canon in B minor (Shumann), Folk Tune (Whitlock), Regina Pacis (Weitz).

Jose Iturbi, celebrated Spanish pianist and conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, will give a recital next Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall, under management of Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. His tentative program includes Mozart's F major sonata, Chopin's B minor sonata, Brahms' E flat minor intermezzo and G minor rhapsody, Ravel's "Alborado del Gracioso," Debussy's "Gold Fish" and "Fireworks."

Alba Rosa Vietor, composer, violinist and pianist, and Marietta Vogel, pianist, will give a joint recital tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. in Phillips Memorial Gallery. The program includes Sonata in D minor, "La Folia" (Corelli-Leonard), Scandinavian Lullaby (Thomson), Romanza Andaluza (Sarasate), Ecossaise (Beethoven-Busoni), Witches' Dance (MacDowell), The Brownies (Korngold), The Juggler (Toch), The Blue Bird Suite (Vietor).

Ferdinand Pranzatelli will be soloist with the Marine Band Orchestra on Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. in Barracks Hall, playing Paganini's violin concerto in D major. Capt. William F. Santelmann, conductor, announces the following prgoram: "Pinocchi" Overture (Toch), "Fire Bird" Suite (Stravinski), "Nuages" and "Fetes" (Debussy), Toccata (Frescobaldi).

Emanuel Vardi will be soloist with the Navy Band Orchestra on Friday at 8:30 p. m. in Departmental Hall, playing Handel's viola concerto in B minor and Morton Gould's "Concertette" in D major. Lieut. Charles Brendler, conductor, announces the following prgoram: Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" (Berlioz), "The Swan of Tuonela" (Sibelius), "Minute" Symphony, Op. 36 (Dohnanyi), "Tasso (Liszt).

Under direction of Anthony Campanella, the Central High School Band will give a concert of Latin-American music Sunday afternoon, January 30, in the Pan-American Union. Florence Lyman, soprano, accompanied by Elena Crivella, will contribute a group of songs.

Virginia Day, Claudia Chapline and Jean Poling, piano pupils of Alma Grayce Miller, will assist voice pupils of Esther Linkins in a recital at 4 p. m. today in her residence studio. The singers are Doris Blake, Mary Lou Carlisle, Ann Courtney, Alice Jacobs, Dorothy Jane Koch, Betty and Bill Lally.

The third recital in Howard University Concert Series will be given by Bruce Simonds, pianist, on Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel. An artist well known in this country and Europe, Simonds is dean of the school of music at Yale University, where he received both his B. A. and M. A. degrees. His program is as follows: Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Mendelssohn), Three Etudes (Scarlatti), Sonata in E flat major, Op. 81a (Beethoven), Nocturne in C sharp minor, Etude in A flat major, Scherzo in E major (Chopin), The Whippoorwill (Daniel Gregory Mason), Menetriers et Glaneuses (Deodat de Saverac), Ondine (Ravel), Alma Brasileira (Villa-Lobos), Caprice (Dohnanyi).

Rudolph Friml's popular operetta, "Rose Marie," will be presented by the Columbia Light Opera Company on February 10, 11 and 12 in Roosevelt High School. Jeannette Bittner will sing the title role. Reservations can be made at the company's headquarters, 706 13th st.

Paul M. Mahler, general manager of the Victory Symphony Orchestra, announces that the organization will give its first concert on February 16 in the new ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel. Additional musicians are needed by the orchestra, which rehearses Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in Phillips Memorial Gallery. Deadline for applications is February 2.

Exhibit by Children

An exhibition of paintings done by the children during the summer and autumn will be opened at the Children's Art Center, 1744 K st. nw., next Sunday at 4 o'clock. The Center, we are glad to report, is flourishing and now enjoys substantial backing. Classes are under the direction of Mrs. Cornelia Yuditsky.

Orchestra Will Introduce Kabalevski Symphony Here

By HANS KINDLER

Schubert's Symphony in B minor or "Unfinished" Symphony, is as spontaneous, as sincere and as affecting as anything he ever wrote. There is grief in it and tenderness, melancholy and drama and protest. But there is more—its most poignant passages (such as the ever-moving dramatic moments in the first movement before the development section and again shortly before the end) go to the very depth of what music at its greatest has meant to us, touching the mystery of life and death, the yearning of mankind. The symphony was composed as a gesture of acknowledgement—and what a gesture!—in return for the dazzling compliment conferred on Schubert when he was elected an honorary member of the musical societies of Linz and Graz.

Kabaleveski's Second Symphony

A man's fame is often involuntarily acquired at the expense of another's. Wagner over-shadowed Liszt. Strauss outdid Sibelius for a long time in public favor. Schubert was hidden by Beethoven's shadow. A present-day instance is the one of Shostakovich, who has captured the imagination of the public to the exclusion of many of the older Russian composers of the day including Glier, Myaskovski, and even Prokofiev. As for the younger ones, they are practically unknown. Nevertheless there are great talents among them. One of these is Dmitri Kabalevski, of whose Second Symphony we will give the first Washington performance.

The work is blazingly brilliant in its orchestral color, and direct in its melodic appeal. Energy and impetuosity, dramatically sharp rhythms alternate with a fervently lyrical secondary theme. Throughout the entire first movement one realizes a sense of struggle, which makes for vivid contrasts. The second movement is sombre, nearly a marcia funebre, and typically Russian in the deep melancholy of its moods. It might have been written by a modern Chaikovski. The Finale (the symphony has but three movements) by contrast is gay, temperamental, sparkling. Shortly before the end, a triumphant return of the lyric second theme of the first movement brings the work to a stunning close. If this Second Symphony is any indication, great things can be expected from Kabalevski.

New Composition by Morton Gould

The other two numbers on the program are the Variations by Arenski on a charming theme by Chaikovski, called "Jesus Once a Garden Made"; and a new composition by the young American composer, Morton Gould, based on "When Johnnie Comes Marching Home."

To Present 'La Traviata'

Offering the second production of its first season, the Washington Opera Company will present Verdi's "La Traviata" on Tuesday night in Constitution Hall with Carlo Peroni as conductor. Dorothy Kirsten, young American soprano well known as a radio singer in addition to her successful accomplishments in opera, will be heard as Violetta. Alexander Sved, barytone from the Metropolitan, will sing the role of the elder Germont, and William Webster, manager of the company, will take the leading tenor role of Alfredo.

Ballets Russes Here Five Evenings

The National Symphony Orchestra Association will present the Ballets Russes de Monte Carlo in two performances in Constitution Hall on Wednesday and Thursday nights, February 2 and 3. Principal dancers in the troupe are Alexandra Danilova, Nathalia Krassovska, Dorothy Etheridge, Ruthanna Boris, Tatiana Granzeva, Maria Tallcheif, Igor Yuskevich, Frederic Franklin, Leon Danielian, James Starbuck, Grant Muradov and Alexander Gudovich. Franx Allers is the conductor.

Rainhold Glier's famous "Red Poppy" will be staged for the first time here on February 2 on a program that includes Bronislava Nizhinska's "Chopin Concerto" and Borodin's "Prince Igor" dances arranged by Fokin. Two novelties will be presented on February 3: Nishinska's "Etude" with Bach music and Gustave Pittaluga's "Romeria de los Cornudos" ("Cuckolds' Fair") with choreography by Pilar Lopez. On this bill Aaron Copland's "Rodeo, or the Courting at Burnt Ranch,'" will be given, and Danilova and Yuskevich will dance the classical pas de deux from Chaikovski's "The Nutcracker."

Lily Pons, Kostelanetz In Special Concert

Lily Pons and Andre Kostelanetz will appear with the National Symphony Orchestra on Thursday night in Constitution Hall in a special concert. The diminutive soprano, who celebrated on January 2 the thirteenth anniversary of her debut at the Metropolitan, will introduce here "Four Songs of Ronsard" written for and dedicated to her by the French modernist, Darius Milhaud. Their titles are "A Une Fontaine," "A Cupidon," "Tais-toi, Babillarde" and "Dieu Vous Garde." She will also sing an aria from Gretry's "Zemire et Azor," the "Caro Nome" aria from "Rigoletto;" Rackmaninov's "Vocalise," and Frank La-Forge's "Fledermaus Fantasia" on themes from the Strauss operetta.

Kostelanetz will conduct the orchestra and has programmed the local premiere of Dmitri Kabalevski's Overture to "Colas Breugnon," Rinski-Korsakov's "Spanish Caprice" and four numbers from Albeniz's "Iberia" suite orchestrated by Arbos.

Mexico Mexico

PROLOGUE TO MEXICO'S VICTORY FIESTA

• There's a serenade to Victory in the staccato notes of Mexico's modern symphony. The strum of the guitar has changed to the hum of machinery . . . the click of the castanets to the click of train wheels hauling the materiel, personnel and equipment of a fighting nation. The blasting explosions at the mines, the reverberating boom of falling trees, the mighty tread of marching men —these are the sounds of Mexico's modern serenade—the prologue to the Victory Fiesta.

If you are not actively engaged in the war effort, or if you are but have earned a furlough for rest and relaxation, then—it's a good-neighbor policy to visit Mexico this winter.

If you plan to visit your boy in camp in the Southwest, or if business takes you to Central or South America, include a stay in "sunny" Mexico.

No passport is necessary, and there are no new travel restrictions for American born citizens. Moreover, your dollar buys more. But make your reservations early—travel light and start in the middle of the week.

'Command Performance' Poses a Problem

Seat Demand for Special 'One Night Stand' Has Passed the Point Where It Can Be Met

By NELSON B. BELL

FOLLOWING A PATTERN familiar to "show business," the "command performance," which has comprised the initial event in the celebration of the President's birthday these past eight years, has grown from a precarious enterprise into one of the theater's most eagerly awaited "occasions."

By the same token, Hollywood stars who once were reluctant to journey to the Capital to participate in the arduous round of appearances for the benefit of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, now clamor for the privilege of having a part in what has become a distinguished national event.

It has taken a deal of doing over the span of a decade to establish the charitable observances of the President's natal day as the most illustrious of the amusement world's contributions to the welfare of mankind.

The local machinery involved in the planning and smooth execution of the Birthday Celebrations on a split-second schedule is both intricate and expansive.

Commissioner John Russell Young, general chairman of the District committee having the multiplicity of events in charge, has under his direction some 15 or more subcommittees, enlisting the untiring and gratuitous services of more than 300 volunteer workers.

And they are workers.

Like Running Circuit

The mere task of grouping the visiting stars and routing them through the succession of birthday balls and special midnight shows, without collision or duplication, in itself is the equivalent of drawing up a route sheet for a half-dozen or so "road companies," playing an equal number of "stands."

The thing this year has taken on proportions that have all but got out of hand.

Particularly is this true in the case of tonight's "command performance" of "The Voice of the Turtle," at the National Theater.

The reputation of the Broadway hit play, starring Margaret Sullavan and Elliott Nugent, with only Audrey Christie in support; the unprecedented population of the metropolitan area, and the Capital's characteristic avidity for the best in theatrical entertainment have created a situation never before encountered by the Birthday Committee.

Resentment and recrimination have run high since the box-office sale a week ago last Wednesday failed to supply enough tickets to serve more than a small percentage of the number of prospective purchasers forming a two-block line.

Beyond Human Power

In attempting, on a previous occasion, to absolve the National Theater of any blame, in the circumstances, we had no thought of implying that any other individual or group was culpable.

No one is at fault in a situation that is beyond human power to meet to the satisfaction of more than an approximate 1700 people out of a total Greater Washington population of a million.

It is only, as I have said, that the "command performance" has outgrown the dimensions by which it has heretofore been measured.

More than once in the experience of those who have been associated with the Birthday Celebrations since their inception in 1933, the problem of the "command performance" has not been to effect an equitable and widespread distribution of tickets, but to get those tickets sold at all.

Not all of these single, contributed performances have been sellouts. While many of them have been, last year's and this are the glittering and overwhelming examples of the latter-day order in the Capital of the Nation that mark a new turn in the habits of Washington theatergoers.

New System Needed

The extraordinary repercussions of this year's seat sale suggest that a new modus operandi needs to be worked out and put in future operation, if the Birthday Celebrations are to be continued and the Capital is to remain overcrowded with footlight enthusiasts who also feel a keen desire to aid a noble cause.

The responsibility to the public rests neither upon the National Theater nor the Birthday Committee, to whose members, incidentally, a surprisingly small number of tickets are made available for purchase.

This could be easily contrived by auctioning off the house to the highest bidders, after obligatory commitments have been discharged.

The various basic price scales could be put on the block separately and in turn, and the public buyers permitted to set their own prices beyond that in proportion to their anxiety to enjoy the play and help the cause.

At any rate, it is a thought. Perhaps a feasible one, perhaps not.

Present and Future

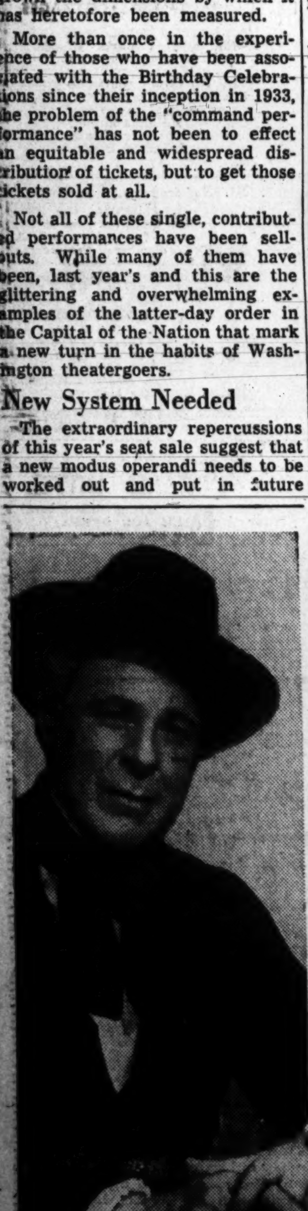
In the meantime, following tonight's "Voice of the Turtle," Washington playgoers will have opportunity to convulse themselves over the hilarious humors of "Kiss and Tell" for a second and final week, beginning tomorrow night. Playing to virtual capacity at every performance, this George Abbott production of F. Hugh Herbert's three-act examination of modern adolescents and their elders is one of the comedy highlights not only of this season, but of an entire career of play-watching.

In its wake, and also for two weeks, the imperishable "Student Prince" will be the bill on E Street, with Everett Marshall in the stellar role and Detmar Poppen, Nina Varela, Frank Hornaday and other favorites in their familiar roles still in the cast.

And not too far away is "Life With Father," readjusted to meet the exorbitant demands of the District child labor law.

Looking as far into the future as the fortnight beginning Monday night, February 28, there is discernible the Theater Guild's production of Franz Werfel's "Jacobowsky and the Colonel," in which Louis Calhern and Annabella will be seen in the principal roles, under the direction of Elia Kazan.

That should awaken lively anticipations.



Everett Marshall, famous operatic barytone, who returns to the National as star of "The Student Prince," for a two-week engagement, beginning Sunday night, January 30.

Deanna Durbin and Franchot Tone, costars of Universal's "His Butler's Sister," Miss Durbin's first farce, scheduled as the next screen attraction at RKO-Keith's Theater. The stellar triumvirate is completed by Pat O'Brien in the male title role. A numerous and well-chosen cast assume the supporting roles in a film play that has been enthusiastically acclaimed in other cities.

'Ice-Capades' Opens Tuesday At Uline Arena

"Ice-Capades of 1944," boasting a cast of 152 persons and 30 bright acts, Tuesday night begins a 10-day engagement extending through Thursday, February 3, at Uline Arena.

The box-office at Uline Arena remains open today between 1 and 11 p. m., while tickets will remain on sale both at Uline Arena and The Fairway Sporting Goods Co., 1328 G st. nw., on week days.

Many of the favorites of other years are returning this year, while bright and interesting new faces also have been added. Of the 152 performers approximately 108 are women, and all are splendidly trained.

A total of 12 performances, 10 nightly and two matinee, round out the local engagement. Matinees are set for Saturday and Sunday, January 29-30. Saturday's matinee is being co-sponsored by Radio Station WRC and The Variety Club of Washington as a War Bond performance which has set a goal of $2,000,000.

War bonds carrying a face value of from $25 up and three free tickets to the War Bond performance, which will reward the purchasers, are available at Loew's Capitol, Warner Brothers' Earle and RKO Keith's Theaters and at the Station WRC War Bond Booth.

Cugat Draws Self

After granting requests for caricatures of various personalities on the "Mr. Co-ed" set, Xavier Cugat was asked by Director George Sidney if he could caricature himself. Without looking in the mirror Cugat quickly sketched his likeness so well that Sidney is using the drawing in the new Technicolor filmusical.

Eleanor O'Meara, holder of many Canadian, amateur, skating records, who is making her professional debut as one of the featured artists in the "Ice-Capades of 1944," opening a 10-day engagement in the Uline Arena on Tuesday night. With a total cast of 152, this year's Victory edition of "Ice-Capades" is said to surpass all of its predecessors.

Curtiz at Top

During the filming of "Passage to Marseille," Director Michael Curtiz was notified that a national poll conducted by a trade magazine had named him the year's top director.

Paulette Campaigns

Paulette Goddard will campaign for safety in war jobs at the request of the National Safety Council by dressing to perfection as a shipyard welder in Mark Sandrich's "I Love a Soldier."

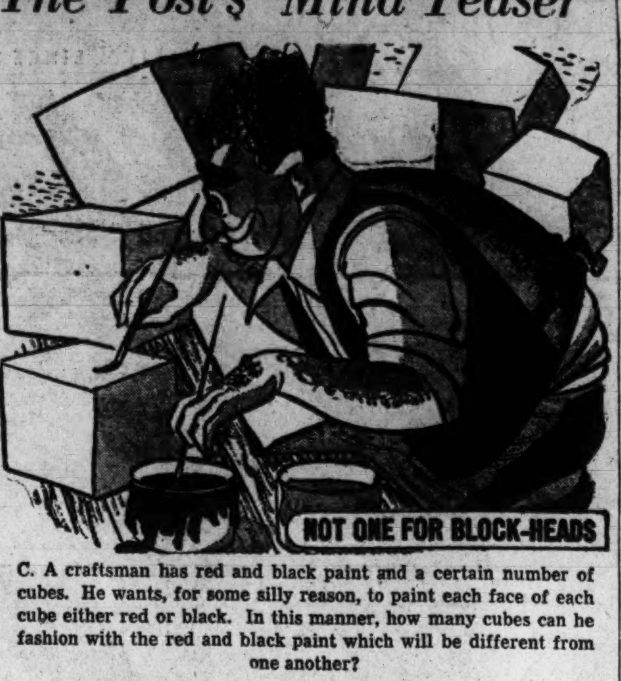
Humor Blossoms Forth On Marines' Fiber Helmet

(By Staff Sergt. Jeremiah A. O'Leary, USMC, of 1222 Quincy St. N.W.)

Southwest Pacific (Delayed.).—The fiber helmet has taken the place of the yellow slicker and the tin flivver as American youth's favorite bulletin board for catchy remarks and cartoons.

Shapely femininity is a favorite subject of Marine artists. Quailing Japs, malformed Hitlers, and Leatherneck emblems are common. Almost half of the men bear their names or initials on the front of their helmets.

The Post's Mind Teaser



C. A craftsman has red and black paint and a certain number of cubes. He wants, for some silly reason, to paint each face of each cube either red or black. In this manner, how many cubes can he fashion with the red and black paint which will be different from one another?

By JOHN HENRY CUTTER, Ph. D.

Questions

1. He was born in Warsaw, took his education on the fly in night school in America, for a time nickeled along as a glove salesman in New York. He it was who discovered Mary Garden, Caruso, Geraldine Farrar, Anna Sten, to limit the list. He made Robert Montgomery a star by persuading him to drape his long neck in high collars. He splurges: "I want a film that begins with an earthquake and works up to a climax." When he tried to sign up George Bernard Shaw the latter said: "The difference between us, Mr. ——, is that you think only of art, while I think only of money." He said a guy was "born in an orpheum asylum." About one of his actors: "We're overpaying him, but he's worth it." Who is he?

2. It is quite possible, as many experts maintain, that the S. S. Titantic, which hit an iceberg in midocean, did not sink to the bottom, but now rests some hundreds of feet above the bottom. Assuming this is so, explain how it could be?

3. Speaking of ships, does the United States Navy limit the width of warships, and if so, why is the width limited?

4. Arrange eight matches in a straight row, leaving about an inch between them. Number the matches 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. Now rearrange these matches in four pairs by passing one match over two matches four times. You must do this in four moves or no cigars. The match moved must go over two others each time.

5. It took athletic Maisie an hour and a half to cover 10 miles. She walked part of the way, ran the rest. She walked uniformly at 4½ miles per hour, ran the last stretch just twice as fast. How far did she walk?

6. Here is the one you MUST answer in less than TWO seconds, or it's no fun: Which weighs more, a pound of lead or 2 pounds of cork?

7. Now let's see how observant you are: Is the head on an Indian nickel a left profile, right profile or a three-quarter front view?

8. If, when I sell a washing machine for $90, I lose 25 per cent of the cost, how must I sell it to gain 25 per cent?

9. Leaving all titled gentry out of it, who was the one gent who dared to sit before Queen Victoria with his hat on?

10. What is the color of a grass lawn covered with a mantle of snow?

11. The slogan of America's most famous barber's daughter is, "It takes all the fun out of a bracelet if you have to buy it yourself." Tallulah Bankhead and she were at the Stork Club. "I met the most marvelous man," said la Bankhead. "He'd be wonderful for you." "Is he my type?" "Sure. He's alive and breathing." For years she has been a familiar face in the pleasure plazas, has often been married. Her middle name is the surname of F. D. R.'s righthand man, her last name the same as the author of "Ulysses." Who is she?

A. If the earth rotated so fast that a day were only an hour and a half long, a person on the equator would weigh nothing. Can you explain why?

B. True or false:

(a) If water were not compressible, the Atlantic Ocean would be several feet higher.

(b) Thinking of the $150 he contributed to F. D. R.'s 1932 campaign fund, Wendell Willkie later said: "I wish I had it back."

(c) At the age of 4 Mickey Rooney appeared in a movie as a midget. This was his first professional appearance.

(d) The Normandie (U. S. S. Lafayette), Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth cannot pass through the Panama Canal.

(e) Bob Fitzsimmons fought in the prize ring until he was 50.

D. Tommy is pulling his four-wheeled express cart up the front door steps, which are level. The two front wheels are on the third step, the two rear wheels are on the second step when Tommy stops. Of course the cart stops, too. Will it remain on the steps when Tommy lets go of the handle, or will it roll down the steps?

Answers

1. Sam Goldwyn.

2. The specific gravity at the point where the Titanic floats is equal to the specific gravity of the ship. Any object can displace only its own weight.

3. Yes. Warships must be able to pass through the Panama Canal.

4. Move 4 to 7, 6 to 2, 1 to 3 and 5 to 8.

5. 3½ miles.

7. Right profile.

8. $150.

9. Queen Victoria's coachman.

10. Still green, of course.

11. Peggy Hopkins Joyce.

A. The earth's centrifugal force would offset the pull of gravity.

B. (a) True (b) True (c) False. Mickey appeared in a tiny tuxedo in his vaudeville debut at the age of 11 months (d) True (e) True.

C. Ten. One with 6 red faces, one with 5 red faces, two with 4 red faces, two with 3 red faces, two with 2 red faces, one with 1 red face, and one with no red face.

D. It will remain on the steps, for both wheels are on a level plane and the downward force of the cart is perpendicular to the steps.

Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart

Postoffice officials are in receipt of a number of requests for souvenir sheets of the "down-trodden" series of stamps, but have given them no consideration. This is most satisfactory to collectors. While souvenir issues have been brought out as philatelic items in the past, there seems to be no necessity for such, for they are not required for postal use. Some countries have issued the souvenir sheet for revenue purposes only. To request a war souvenir issue seems preposterous at this time and collectors should not be called upon to purchase souvenirs that are unnecessary as postal items. There will be plenty of stamps before long and no doubt collectors will be willing to await legitimate issues.

Nicaragua issued two postage and two air-mail stamps on the second anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor and its declaration of war against the Axis powers. All the stamps show a globe of the world with the Allied flags and the Nicaraguan coat of arms above. Below the map is a red "V" and the word "Victoria." Across the top of the stamp is "Nicaragua is confident of the triumph of democracy." The regular postage issues are 10-centavos purple and 20-c., coffee, and the air mails, 40-c., green and 60-c., light blue.

Editor Hugh Clark of the Standard Postage Stamp Catalogue, says the nine stamps issued for use in Italy, inscribed "Allied Military Postage," will be classified as "occupation" rather than military stamps, the reason being that both civilians and soldiers are allowed to use them.

Louis C. Bean, for the fifth year, will issue a patriotic cover on the President's birthday, the proceeds going to the fight-paralysis fund. His address is 5412-F Belt ave. se.

Philatelic Meetings

The meeting of the Washington Air Mail Society and the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday at the Thomson Community Center was addressed by Isaac Gregg, of the press relations bureau, Postoffice Department. He spoke on postal rates and philately matters. Figures were most amazing: In the fiscal year 1943, 207 million air mail envelopes and 899 million air mail stamps were issued. At present the entire weekly output of 9 million air mail envelopes is being used in New York and San Francisco. He read a leter from Postmaster General Walker sayng that nothing of a definite nature can be made at this time regarding a 1944 philatelic program. "Stamps depicting various phases on the far-flung battlefronts of the world are still in the tentative stage," the postmaster general said.

Air mail first flights and experimental flights with cachets, together with proofs of the cachets, were exhibited by A. R. O'Roark of the Postoffice Department.

At the meeting on Tuesday the Capital Precancel Club will meet with the Collectors Club when there will be an address and precancel stamp exhibit.

Scheduled: Tuesday, Collectors Club, Branch 5, SPA, Thomson Community Center, 12th and L sts. nw., and Wednesday, Washington Philatelic Society, Lee Sheraton Hotel, 15th and L sts. nw.

The annual Atex 1944 exhibition will be held at Hotel Claridge, Atlantic City, N. J., March 24, 25 and 26. It is sponsored by the Atlantic City Stamp Club, Chapter 105, A. P. S. the National Federation of Stamp Clubs, the New Jersey Philatelic Federation and the Association of South Jersey Stamp Clubs. Besides the exhibit there will be a bourse, auction, regional meetings and banquet. Exhibit entries close February 15, Bela Scholtz, sr., 48 South La Clede pl., Atlantic City, N. J., being chairman.

Lieut. Henry G. Irion, USNR, 809 S. Royal st., Alexandria, Va., has returned to the New Orleans Naval Armed Guard Center after spending the past nine months at sea in command of the gun crew aboard an American merchant vessel. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Irion, 3736 Alton pl.

David J. Stevens, S2/c, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Stevens, has been appointed a section leader at the Naval Air Technical Training Center, Memphis, Tenn.

Pvt. Willard J. Whittaker, 1757 N st., has been ordered to Miami Beach, Fla., for pre-aviation cadet basic training.

Dear Bill:

Each Sunday on this page The Post prints an informal letter on Washington news and gossip. Clip it and send it to your serviceman.

January 22, 1944.

For the first time in 13 years the District will be free of debt—IF the Hill carries out a recommendation for repaying the entire balance on all Federal loans. Sure, it won't last—needs for public improvement will inevitably follow the war. But it would be nice to be in the black even a little while.

As for running our own affairs, the latest idea is to introduce another bill containing the features of the 1940 Griffenhagen plan and ask for its consideration by the House District Committee in addition to the McCarran and Hebert bills.

Also that committee has been assured there would be no loss to the District in tax revenue if a new District-Virginia boundary is fixed. Generally, it would fix the present mean high water mark as the boundary.

It still looks as if the war may outlast these creaky birdcages they use for elevators in the District Building. But the Commissioners are having another try in the 1945 budget at getting four new ones. We can still manage to drag up one flight to the dog tag window—but the Commissioners would have to walk to the fifth floor.

Only a week late (according to the forecast), but entirely satisfying, was last weekend's snowstorm. At midnight Saturday, with snow dry and crunchy and no wind, we were truly "walking in a winter wonderland." Sunday it was the usual D. C. slush until that evening when it started to freeze and sledding became possible—and even some skiing on Brookmont hills.

Sightseeing mecca of the week has been the SS. American Mariner, a heavily armed Liberty ship, and the largest cargo vessel to navigate that ole debbil channel above Alexandria. She's tied up at the Municipal Fish Wharf and is here in connection with the Fourth War Loan drive which started Tuesday with sirens and Jeannette MacDonald and broadcasts. District quota is 95 million.

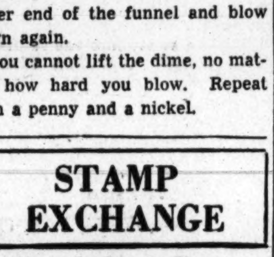
For the first time in the history of our municipal institutions, a board of visitors composed of eight welfare and religious representatives has been appointed for Gallinger, Glenn Dale and Upshur Street Hospitals. It will check at least four times yearly on cleanliness and administrative standards.

The campaign against dirt in Washington restaurants is being praised, with a reduction in court cases from an all-time high of 108 in August to 10 in December.

SYMPHONY SIDELIGHTS: Constitution Hall looks like a sports arena after the intermission when the smoke rushes in the open doors . . . Military and civil folk of other countries, where concerts are nonexistent or limited, applaud our orchestra loud and long . . . During Menuhin's performance of the new Bartok concerto Wednesday, his eyes smiled constantly at Antal Dorati, who was leading without a score which he had memorized in only two weeks . . . It is to be hoped the musicians understand that no discourtesy is implied when the audience literally runs out the minute the program concludes—they're beating it for the special through cars that run direct to various suburbs only from concerts . . . Before the door backstage closes listeners on the right side sometimes catch glimpses of soloist and conductor in a joyous hug . . . Music-hungry servicemen stand outside the hall before concert time in the barren hope someone will produce an extra ticket.

RAE LEWIS.

HOME FUN



YOU CAN, CANNOT LIFT COIN

1. Put a dine in a small household funnel. Close the lower end of the funnel with your thumb and place your mouth just above its rim. Blow down hard against the near edge of the dine and you will lift it out of the funnel easily.

2. Replace the dime, open the lower end of the funnel and blow down again.

D. C. Players Fare Badly At Richmond

By Marian H. Barre

Eleven District fans played last weekend in the annual Richmond (Va.) tourney, returning home over perilous highways with nothing more valuable than a consolation prize. The group included Capt. and Mrs. R. H. Skinner, winners of the second-fight event, Mrs. W. Scott Athey, Mrs. Irene Surguy, William Cheeks, John Darsey, Capt. Jack Feagin, Dr. W. H. Gorton, Gene Hermann, Dr. N. J. McHugh and J. G. Stone.

Some of the group played in only one event, like the Athey Feagin-Stone-Darsey line-up, in the match for foursomes Cheeks, who was pinch-hitting for Captain Skinner, took part in just half of the first open pair session. The others played through the tourney. McHugh and Gorton made the best local showing, qualifying fourth in the opens and finishing twelfth in the finals. Later they were teamed with Chappell and Dewey of Richmond and turned in an above-average team score. Mrs. Surguy and Hermann formed a team with the Skinners. Winner of this match was the Norfolk foursome of Mrs. Leon Landauer, Gerst, Sherman and Pinkus.

Such a galaxy of local talent has seldom been so unlucky.

Federal League

No longer possible to limit enrollment, the Federal Bridge League last Tuesday started its second-half with 33 teams in the field. As many of these "foursomes" actually are septets, the membership now lists nearly 200 Government employes, with more on the waiting list. Divided into three sections, results were as follows:

A new line-up captained by Brigadier General Meade won 15½ out of 24 boards to capture Section 1; the "Bees" took 18 out of 24 boards in Section 2; while the "Scotties" in Section 3 won 15½ out of 20.

"Scotties" now are leaders of the league, "Bees" rank second, the "Westerners" third, and the "Generals" fourth.

This was a complete shake-up of personnel: "Army," "Cascades" and the "Government" foursome, leaders of the first-half, all finished down in Section 2.

Md. Championships Canceled

A persistent rumor was confirmed at Richmond when it was officially announced that the tenth annual Maryland State championships have been canceled: alleged reason given—lack of space in Baltimore hotels . . . This is a blow for Washingtonians, who look on Baltimore as their happy hunting ground. Last year "the Docs," McHugh and Gorton, had a dual victory, winning the men's and the open titles.

Pittsburgh Invitations Out

But Pittsburgh still remains! Mrs. Frederick Eberson, who migrated to the Smoky City over a year ago, has broadcast invitations to the Pittsburgh Bridge Association's annual championships, to be held on January 28, 29 and 30 . . . And as Pittsburghers en masse attended the last District championships it looks as if courtesy demands some return visits by Washington Bridge League members.

On the Chess Board

By Willard Mutchler

The District of Columbia chess 1944 championship tournament will commence at the Washington Chess Divan on February 7 under the jurisdiction of Director Norval P. Wigginton. This annual classic will represent the fifteenth consecutive competition for the I. S. Turover silver trophy, which becomes the permanent possession of the first one to garner the title three straight times.

The District of Columbia Championship Committee this year consists of Chairman I. S. Turover, Secretary Paul J. Miller, jr., Director Wigginton, W. K. Wimsatt, C. W. Stark, W. H. Mutchler, D. H. Mugridge, H. Bronfin, H. Allman, D. Floyd, and E. Cash, all representatives from the three major local clubs, the Divan, the Federal C. C. and the Capital City C. C. Mugridge, Mutchler and one member to be named by the Federal club will function as an eligibility committee to select contestants, limited to 12.

All entries, accompanied by a $5 application fee, must be received by Mr. Wigginton at the Parkside Hotel before February 4. Regular play is scheduled each Sunday afternoon, alternating between the Divan and the Capital City Club, with play-offs of adjournments at the Federal club each Tuesday evening.
